Description/Analysis
Issue/Detail: On July 30,1985, the City Council adopted Ordinance 85-076, which added the Plaza Park/Central Business District Historic District (“District”), to the Sacramento register of historic and cultural resources. On December 10, 2019, the City Council adopted Ordinance 2019-0052, which amended the District to include contributing status to parcels within the District boundaries, while also renaming the district the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District. There were no changes made to the District boundaries.

Following a recent New York Times investigative article detailing allegations of sexual abuse and misconduct against Cesar Chavez during his leadership in the farmworker movement, staff is requesting the Preservation Commission review and comment on a proposal to rename the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District.

This change would reflect a best practice to name districts, monuments, and sites after movements, geographic features, or other events important to the city's history rather than an individual. Furthermore, the name "Cesar Chavez Plaza" reflects the modern name of the park located within the District rather than a name with historic association from the period of significance.

The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District has witnessed nearly 170 years of Sacramento's history and features an equally broad spectrum of architectural periods and styles. Sacramentans have referred to the plaza by a number of names over the course of its history, including its such early appellations as City Plaza, Plaza Park, or simply, "the Plaza," and its current name, Cesar Chavez Plaza. This proposal is independent of any efforts undertaken by the Department of Youth, Parks, and Community Enrichment to rename the park as staff does not recommend renaming the district in conjunction with any proposed park renaming efforts as there would likely be no historical association. As part of the district renaming effort, staff is considering alternatives that reflect the history of the district as a whole rather than renaming the district after the park, which is a small portion of the district.

Staff is requesting that the Preservation Commission review and comment on the proposal to rename the District. Staff is recommending the Commission consider one of the following alternative names, or propose additional alternatives:

1. West End Historic District

   The West End, as it was formerly known before the redevelopment area, encompassed much of the area now occupied by the Capitol Mall. While this area was almost entirely demolished between the 60s-70s, some buildings from prior to this period exist within the District along 9th Street south of J Street. While the District boundaries extend to H Street, "West End Historic District" may be an appropriate name.

2. Plaza Park Historic District

   This option would revert the District to a name similar to its original name (Plaza Park/Central Business District). The name has appropriate historical association with the area as a common historical name of the park itself. However, the district extends beyond the boundaries of the park so it may be appropriate to consider an alternative name that is appropriate for the district as a whole.

3. Central Business District Historic District

   This option would revert the District to a name similar to its original name (Plaza Park/Central Business District). This name does not have as strong historical associations to the district as the term "Central Business District" was not commonly used to refer to the area during the period of significance (1848-1951) and does not recognize the government activity in the area.

4. Civic Center Historic District

The District contains important civic buildings, including Sacramento City Hall, the original library branch, and the former post office. While the name may reflect the government activity in the area, there is no documented use of the term to refer to this area and it does not reflect the commercial nature of other areas of the district.

5. Downtown Historic District

   The term “Downtown” has been used to refer to this area of the city historically, so it may be an appropriate name.

6. 9th Street Historic District

   The District is largely centered on 9th Street, so this may be an appropriate option.

Policy Considerations: The City Council has found “that significant aspects of the City’s rich and diverse historic resources deserve recognition and preservation to foster an understanding of our heritage, and to promote the public health and safety and the economic and general welfare of the people of the city. The preservation and continued use of historic resources are effective tools to sustain and revitalize neighborhoods and business districts within the city, enhance the city’s economic, cultural and aesthetic standing, its identity, its livability, marketability and urban character” (Sacramento City Code, §17.604.100.A.).

Amending the historic district boundaries to reflect the historic evaluations on file reflects best preservation practices and is consistent with Sacramento 2040 General Plan goal HCR 1.1, which provides for the promotion of preservation, restoration, and recognition of historic and cultural resources.

Additional relevant goals and policies include:

- HCR-1.4: Establish and maintain historic districts to protect significant areas.
- HCR-1.6: Ensure early consultation with careholders in planning efforts.
- HCR-2.3: Maintain and update the Sacramento Register of Historic & Cultural Resources.

Economic Impacts: None.

Environmental Considerations: This report involves review and comment on the proposed name change of a historic district. The action is not a project under, and not subject to, the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) because it is an administrative activity that would not result in direct or indirect physical changes in the environment. (CEQA Guidelines, §§ 15060(c)(3), 15378(b)(5).)

Sustainability: Not Applicable.

Commission/Committee Action: None.

Rationale for Recommendation: Staff is requesting the Preservation Commission review and comment on the proposed renaming of the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District. This recommendation is in response to the misconduct allegations regarding Cesar Chavez discussed above. The proposed changes are consistent with historic preservation best practices and federal guidelines on naming historic districts.

Financial Considerations: Not applicable.

Local Business Enterprise (LBE): Not applicable.

ORDINANCE NO. 2019-0052

Adopted by the Sacramento City Council

December 10, 2019

An Ordinance Amending and Restating Ordinance No. 85-076, Relating to the Designation of Historic Districts

BE IT ENACTED BY THE COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF SACRAMENTO:

SECTION 1. Background.

A. The city council has found "that significant aspects of the city's rich and diverse historic resources deserve recognition and preservation to foster an understanding of our heritage, and to promote the public health and safety and the economic and general welfare of the people of the city. The preservation and continued use of historic resources are effective tools to sustain and revitalize neighborhoods and business districts within the city, enhance the city's economic, cultural and aesthetic standing, its identity and its livability, marketability and urban character." (City Code, § 17.604.100.A.)

B. To this end, the city code provides a mechanism for listing landmarks, historic districts, and contributing resources on the Sacramento Register of Historic and Cultural Resources ("Sacramento Register").

C. On March 23, 1985, the city council adopted Ordinance No. 85-076, which designated the following 20 "preservation areas" within the city: 1200-1300 Q Street, 12th Street Commercial, 20th and N Streets, Alkali Flat North, Boulevard Park, C Street Commercial, C Street Industrial, Capitol, Cathedral Square, Capitol Mansions, Fremont Park, Marshall Park, Merchant Street, Memorial Auditorium, Washington, Washington School, Plaza Park/Central Business District, Poverty Ridge, R Street, and South Side.

D. In 2001, the city amended its preservation ordinance, including revising the terminology, changing "preservation areas" to "historic districts." (Ordinance No. 2001- 027.)

E. Since the adoption of Ordinance No. 85-076, historic survey techniques have evolved and become more sophisticated. In addition, some properties within these districts have been altered in a manner such that they do not warrant listing as contributing resources on the Sacramento Register. Accordingly, in 2018, the city undertook a significant effort to resurvey these districts to ensure their accuracy and the continued integrity of the Sacramento Register.

F. The 2018 surveys were conducted by professional architectural historians who meet the United States Secretary of the Interior's Professional Qualification Standards for History and Architectural History. These historians gathered and reviewed data from various sources, including the Center for Sacramento History, Sacramento Community Development Department, the Sacramento County Assessor's Office, the Sacramento Public Library (Sacramento Room), and multiple online sources. Key resources consulted and cited include historic Sanborn Company fire insurance maps, Sacramento city directories, historic newspaper and magazine articles, city and state planning documents, and historic photographs from several repositories and members of the public. Based on this research, the professional architectural historians prepared a historic context for each district, including a period of significance and identification of the architectural styles that are unique to each district.

G. The historians then surveyed every property within the districts to determine if they met the criteria for listing as a contributing resource on the Sacramento Register. The historians identified the significant features and characteristics of the districts, including building features and landscaping. The historians also recorded property type, architectural style, and each property's level of historic integrity (low, medium, or high) based upon established integrity thresholds and methodology. Construction dates from the Sacramento County Assessor served as a baseline to determine if properties fell within the period of significance for each district. The historians updated these construction dates, in some cases, based on the historian's personal observation of the properties, specifically the building's materials and physical condition. All this information, against the backdrop of the district's historic context, was used to determine if a property should be considered a contributing or non-contributing resource.

H. As a result of these surveys, the city, in this ordinance, is amending 17 of the 20 original historic districts by refining their boundaries, designating contributors and noncontributors, and renaming some of the districts. The Memorial Auditorium Historic District and 12th Street Commercial Historic District will be removed from the Sacramento Register as they are not geographically definable areas (City Code section 17.604.210.B.1.a); they lack historic integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association (City Code section 17.604.210.B.2.a); and the collective historic value of the buildings and structures within each district, taken together, are not greater than the historic value of each individual building within the district (City Code section 17.604.210.B.2.b). The C Street Industrial Historic District will remain as is because the surveyors could not access the district, which was enclosed by a fence and locked gate.

I. On October 30, 2019, the preservation director reviewed the proposed changes to the Sacramento Register, including a statement of nomination for the proposed contributing resources, and issued a written statement concurring with the amendments outlined in this ordinance.

J. On November 20, 2019, the preservation commission held a public hearing and voted to recommend the city council adopt this ordinance.

K. On December 3, 2019, the city council held a public hearing in accordance with chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code to consider this proposed ordinance.

SECTION 2.

Ordinance No. 85-076 is amended and restated in its entirety as set forth in Exhibits 1-19.

SECTION 3.

The Memorial Auditorium Historic District is removed from the Sacramento Register as it is no longer a geographically definable area (City Code, section 17.604.210.B.1.a); it no longer has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association (City Code section 17.604.210.B.2.a); and the collective historic value of the buildings and structures within the district, taken together, are not greater than the historic value of each individual building (City Code section 17.604.210.B.2.b).

Specifically, as shown in Exhibit 19, the Memorial Auditorium Historic District is divided in several locations by parking lots and non-contributing buildings. The area lacks cohesion and the historically significant buildings in the districts are listed landmarks on the Sacramento Register and do not rely on the collective value of other buildings within the district for their significance.

SECTION 4.

The 12th Street Commercial Historic District is removed from the Sacramento Register as it is no longer a geographically definable area (City Code section 17.604.210.B.1.a); it no longer has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association (City Code section 17.604.210.B.2.a); and the collective historic value of the buildings and structures within the district, taken together, are not greater than the historic value of each individual building (City Code section 17.604.210.B.2.b).

Specifically, as shown in Exhibit 19, the 12th Street Commercial Historic District consists of a small and fragmented collection of buildings that is peppered with parking lots, vacant parcels, and recent infill development. The area lacks cohesion and the historically significant buildings in the districts are listed landmarks on the Sacramento Register and do not rely on the collective value of other buildings within the district for their significance.

SECTION 5.

The amendments set forth in this ordinance are consistent with state and federal preservation standards for the identification and protection of historic and cultural resources. The amendments are also consistent with the City of Sacramento 2035 General Plan.

1200-1300 Q STREET HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 1.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 1.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as part of a distinctive grouping of modest, high-basement houses that were constructed along Q Street between 12th and 14th streets in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Most of the houses in the district were built in the Queen Anne style, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, all of which contribute to their cohesiveness as a grouping. The district contains a rare surviving example of a small cottage built along an alley, a formerly common housing type in the nineteenth century when the alleys served as auxiliary housing areas. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 1.C and 19, the 1200-1300 Q Streets Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a distinctive grouping of modest, high-basement houses that were constructed along Q Street between 12th and 14th streets in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Most of the houses in the district were built in the Queen Anne style, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 1.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 1.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 1.B are located within the 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

As shown in Exhibits 1.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Prairie, Craftsman, and Vernacular, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 1.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1868 and ends in 1910, and relate to the district's historical significance as a residential neighborhood development on the outskirts of Sacramento's urbanized downtown during the period of significance.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 1.C. and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 1.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 1.C).

Exhibit 1.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District is located within Sacramento's original 1848 street grid and consists of approximately one-and-a-half city blocks bounded by the tracks of the Regional Transit light rail to the south on Whitney and Quill alleys, a parking lot to the east of 13th Street, and recent apartment building infill to the north along Q Street and to the east on 14th Street. The district primarily consists of a grouping of late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century single-family houses arranged along the south side of Q Street, as well as three houses of a similar age and style that were relocated from Alkali Flat to 14th Street.

The 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District contains a grouping of high basement houses that offers a glimpse of what many of Sacramento's streets looked like in the late nineteenth century. Although Sacramento's 1848 city grid officially extended as far south as Y Street (present-day Broadway) in the nineteenth century, R Street represented the de facto southern city limit. The Sacramento Valley Railroad (SVRR) ran along the top of a levee at R Street, which had been constructed in 1854 as part of efforts to protect Sacramento from the floods that periodically devastated the city. With the R Street levee in place, Q Street became the southernmost street upon which Sacramentans might build their family houses. The levee, however, did not have the effect city planners intended. During particularly severe floods in the winter of 1861-1862, it trapped floodwaters within the city, worsening the effects of the floods.

Throughout the rest of the 1860s, the city carried out several projects to address the issue of flooding, including strengthening levees and completing a redirection of the American River through a new channel to the north by the end of 1868. At the same time, increasing railroad activity downtown and the city's growing population caused the city's downtown, where many Sacramentans lived, to become increasingly overcrowded, polluted, and crime-ridden. Sacramentans began to build their houses in previously uninhabitable or outlying areas in search of cleaner, quieter, and safer places to build their family homes.

By 1871, painters, carpenters, laborers, and other working-class men and women had settled on the 1200-1300 block of Q Street, just one block north of the R Street levee. The beginning of streetcar service on P Street in 1892 made the area even more attractive to residents who needed a means to travel to their places of work downtown, increasing residential development in the area. By 1895, all but two of the parcels on Q Street from 12th to 14th streets were filled with wood-framed single-family houses. The city's alleys often served as auxiliary residential streets in the nineteenth century, and several smaller dwellings occupied the parcels behind Q Street along Whitney and Quill Alleys. The nearest commercial operations were the Siller Bros. lumber sheds on 14th Street between P and Q streets. Residents included many employees of the Southern Pacific rail yards—such as painters, carpenters, machinists—who worked in the car shops in the northwest corner of the city.

Industrial development increased directly to the south of Q Street in 1907 when the Western Pacific Railroad built a competing set of railroad tracks along Whitney and Quill alleys, parallel to the old SVRR route on R Street, which was by then owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad. Freight service began on the line in 1909 and passenger service followed in 1910. The new railroad line attracted industrial and commercial businesses but also brought noise and pollution, transforming the once quiet residential neighborhood. By 1915, one-story dwellings, which had been built along the quiet alley in the nineteenth century and which then faced the bustling railroad tracks, had been removed.

Meanwhile, Q Street continued to evolve as the population density increased. Developers attracted potential homeowners to Q Street's "cottages modern" by advertising amenities such as elm shade trees, multiple rooms, large closets, indoor baths, gas, and electricity. Residents included musicians, gardeners, clerks, the city's harbormaster, and working women who held jobs as clerks and music teachers.

The advent of the automobile also changed the physical landscape. By 1915, a two-story garage had been built on the alley behind 1208 and 1212 Q Street. In 1931, it was replaced by a larger one-story brick warehouse that was used as an automobile repair shop. In spite of increasing automobile use, Q Street was still unpaved in 1921 when protests from local residents caused the city's commissioner of streets to abandon plans to pave the street from 2nd to 22nd streets. As the automobile increased in popularity, the demand for streetcar service decreased. In 1940, streetcar service on Line 5, which ran down P Street, ended and was replaced by a bus route.

Irreversible fragmentation of the formerly cohesive grouping of single-family houses on the 1200 block of Q Street occurred in the middle of the twentieth century. Between 1957 and 1964, two of the houses in front of the brick warehouse were demolished. By 1970, an additional garage, machine and welding shop, parking lot, and shop had been constructed on the parcels near the 1930s-era automobile repair shop.

Redevelopment projects in other neighborhoods of the city also affected Q Street. In 1984, the Capital Area Development Authority (CADA) relocated three high-basement Victorian-era houses from Alkali Flat and one high-basement Craftsman bungalow from 16th Street to the northwest corner of 14th and Q streets in 1984. The houses were built in a similar style to those that were built on Q Street in the late nineteenth century and added to the new 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District, which the city designated in 1985.

In the 1980s, construction began on Sacramento Regional Transit's new light rail system, which would run along the Western Pacific Railroad's right-of-way down Whitney and Quill alleys and include a stop at 13th Street. Passenger service began in 1987. Although the light rail introduced an important new amenity to the city, the resulting noise and crime along its route led some residents to vacate houses located directly beside its tracks, including those along Q Street. In 2005, "dangerous site structures" at 1218 Q Street, including the last residence in front of the 1930s automobile repair shop, were demolished and replaced by a second parking lot. In 2014, Research America, whose headquarters are located on the site of a former corner store at 1232 Q Street, purchased 11 properties on the 1200 block of Q Street and the 1700 block of 12th Street with the intention of using them as parking space for the business's employees. At least one building on the block remained vacant in 2017.

Period of Significance: 1868-1910

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the 1200-1300 Q Street Historic District begins with the improvement of flood control measures in Sacramento after the redirection of the American River in 1868 and ends with the start of passenger service on the Western Pacific Railroad tracks on Whitney and Quill alleys in 1910, which brought increasing industrialization to the once quiet neighborhood and began its gradual fragmentation.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Prairie, Craftsman, Vernacular

Character-Defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units • Small houses, accessory structures, parking and auxiliary uses located along alley
Mass & Form	• Predominately two-story houses with high basements • High basement, or Delta, style buildings with staircases leading up to the primary living spaces on a raised first story • Nineteenth-century houses built on long, narrow plots and exhibit vertical massing • Early twentieth-century houses built on wider plots and exhibit horizontal or cuboid massing • Concentration of houses with Prairie and Classical Revival details on the corner of Q and 14th streets
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically wide-width channel rustic siding, three or four lap siding, or shingles, often of varying shapes and patterns on gabled ends
Roofs	• Prominent front-facing gabled roofs, often with a centrally placed circular vent; some low-pitched hipped roofs with multiple dormers • Brick or clinker brick chimneys
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows
Porches	• Prominent full or half-width porches accessed by a wooden staircase • Brick or clinker brick porch walls and column bases

Ornamentation	• Queen Anne details, including incised brackets under roof eaves; slender, turned porch posts and balusters; and stained-glass windows, especially on transoms over primary entrance • Classical Revival details, including fluted square columns and pilasters, modified Ionic columns, and dentils along cornice • Prairie details, including wide overhanging eaves and horizontal massing

20TH AND N STREETS HISTORIC DISTRICT

Section 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the 20th and N Streets Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The 20th and N Streets Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 2.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 2.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development consisting of modest-scale Victorian-era buildings situated around the intersection of 20th and N Streets. The predominant architectural styles are Queen Anne and Classic Box. The Classic Box was a particularly common building type that was constructed along streetcar lines at the turn of the century. Though many of the buildings have been altered, they share a similar massing, setback, Delta-style high basements, and gabled or hipped roofs. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 2.C and 19, the 20th and N Streets Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a district with modest-scale Victorian-era buildings situated around the intersection of 20th and N Streets. The predominant architectural styles are Queen Anne and Classic Box, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

Section 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 2.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 2.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the 20th and N Streets Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 2.B are located within the 20th and N Streets Historic District as shown in Exhibit 2.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

As shown in Exhibits 2.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Folk Victorian, Classical Revival, Classic Box, and Prairie, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 2.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1888 and ends in 1910 and relate to the city's urban expansion to the east and south as a result of the streetcar during this period.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 2.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 2.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 2.C).

Exhibit 2.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The 20th and N Streets Historic District preserves a small cluster of late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century buildings located between the East End Historic District and Winn Park Historic District. The district's core buildings were erected over an approximately twenty-two-year period, between 1888 and 1910. Until the final decades of the nineteenth century, the area in question was situated at the eastern edge of the most developed parts of the city, far removed from the dense residential and commercial areas that marked Sacramento's crowded West End. By 1895, the area surrounding 20th and N streets was densely populated with residents and businesses.

The growth of this section of the city can be attributed to the completion of streetcar lines that connected the "Old City" of Sacramento to the soon-to-be neighborhoods of Midtown and the East End, so named because of its location east of the Capitol. The electrified routes along M and P streets, which both began their operations during the early 1890s, and the subsequent streetcar extensions along 20th and 21st streets, provided convenient transportation access to the area. Aside from a few homes that were constructed during the late 1880s, such as that of 1320 20th Street, the residences of the 20th and N Streets Historic District were built during the 1890s and the first years of the twentieth century. This pattern of development aligns with trends nationwide as residents in cities across the country migrated from dense urban centers to streetcar suburbs that emerged along streetcar around the turn of the century.

The neighborhood changed dramatically with the introduction of the Western Pacific Railroad. In 1907, the railroad company was granted the right to build a second set of transcontinental railroad tracks through the city on an 80-foot right-of-way between 19th and 20th streets, the present western boundary of the district. Freight service began on the new rail line in 1909, and passenger service followed a year later.

The properties near the intersection of 20th and N streets attracted working-class individuals and families, particularly after the arrival of the railroad. Though most of the homes within the district began as single-family dwellings, many were converted into apartments by 1915. Listings in the Sacramento Union advertised numerous furnished flats and housekeeping rooms, accommodations that often served single men and women employed in low-wage industries. The ads touted the wholesome character of the neighborhood and its proximity to streetcars.

With the multitude of transportation channels servicing the vicinity of the district, commercial ventures emerged alongside residences at the turn of the century. One such enterprise was that of Clarence M. Griffeth's ice cream and butter factory, formerly located at 2008 N Street. Clarence, the son of prominent M Street grocer Melbourne B. Griffeth, began his business in 1910. By 1911, he had established a manufacturing facility at the rear of 2008 N Street. The creamery went out of business just five years later, but the district's current assortment of mixed-use residential and retail establishments preserves its character as a node of localized commercial activity.

The twentieth-century trajectory of the 20th and N Streets Historic District remained closely linked with transportation. In 1913, the Lincoln Highway, one of the first cross-country roads in the country, was completed and included a route through Sacramento that ran down 12th Street and then along 15th Street before turning east along M Street, less than a block from the northern boundary of the district.

Subsequent to the highway and other street improvement projects, automobile garages replaced carriage barns along the alleys within the districts. As automobile ownership increased, many residents who could afford to do so relocated to residential suburbs outside of the outskirts of city. The demand for streetcars gradually declined and by 1947 all routes throughout Sacramento had ended.

Period of Significance: 1888-1910

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, Classical Revival, Prairie

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Historically single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• Buildings primarily one to two stories tall • Some houses with Delta-style high basements and raised first story • High concentration of Classic Box-form houses
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, three lap, channel rustic, or shingle siding
Roofs	• Front-facing gabled, cross-gabled, and hipped roofs, often with centrally-placed dormers
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows • Single- and multi-story bay windows present on many Victorian-era homes
Porches	• Prominent full- or half-width porches accessed by a staircase
Ornamentation	• Decorative shingles on gabled ends • Classical Revival details, including fluted pilasters, columns, dentils, and pedimented porticoes

Property Landscape	• Consistently large setback on lettered streets, measuring approximately 40 feet from the street curb • Inconsistent, but generally narrower setback on numbered streets • Shallow front yards, some gated with metal fences that incorporate original brick piers • Some brick patios and walkways
Streetscape	• Hitching posts and evidence of removed hitching posts in the form of L-shaped concrete strips next to street curb, particularly on 20th Street • A mix of deciduous and palm trees planted in grassy parking strips lining the street front • Varying sidewalk widths to accommodate street trees

ALKALI FLAT NORTH HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Alkali Flat North Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Alkali Flat North Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 3.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 3.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as working-class cottages during the city's building boom after the fires and floods of the 1850s and 1860s. The houses were largely built during two main periods: an initial period in the 1860s and 1870s, characterized by the Greek Revival and Italianate styles, and a later period around 1895, characterized by a mixture of Queen Anne and Stick/Eastlake styles. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 3.C and 19, the Alkali Flat North Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a small concentration of houses that are unified aesthetically by their physical development as working-class cottages during the city's building boom after the fires and floods of the 1850s and 1860s. The houses were largely built during two main periods: an initial period in the 1860s and 1870s, characterized by the Greek Revival and Italianate styles, and a later period around 1895, characterized by a mixture of Queen Anne and Stick/Eastlake styles. Even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 3.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 3.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Alkali Flat North Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 3.B are located within the Alkali Flat North Historic District as shown in Exhibit 3.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 3.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Greek Revival, Gothic Revival, Moorish Revival, Federal, Second Empire, Classical Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, and Vernacular, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 3.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1852 and ends in 1936 and represent a cohesive grouping of middle-class cottages erected during mid-nineteenth century when several fires and floods resulted in a building boom to house the city's growing population.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 3.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 3.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento City Code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 3.C).

Exhibit 3.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: Alkali Flat is Sacramento's oldest existing residential neighborhood. Once part of a dry lakebed, it was named after the chalky, white deposits of alkali that were left on the streets after the floods that periodically affected the area. After a devastating fire in 1852 destroyed 70 percent of Sacramento, the city began to rebuild, often in fireproof brick. This included some houses in the new residential neighborhood of Alkali Flat, which emerged on the undeveloped land north of G Street.

Thanks to its convenient location near the city's central business district, Alkali Flat became the home of Sacramento's elite throughout the mid- to late nineteenth century. Governors, legislators, business and industry leaders, newly wealthy merchants, artists, physicians, and all manner of the local gentry settled in Alkali Flat. Among them was J. Neely Johnson, the fourth governor of California whose Greek Revival home still stands at 1029 F Street. Alkali Flat's affluent and influential residents filled the neighborhood with mansions and stately homes that were built in the most fashionable architectural styles of the time, many on lots with verdant gardens surrounded by wrought iron or picket fences.

Sacramento's well-to-do residents built homes in the southern sections of Alkali Flat, while working- class residents settled in the neighborhood's northern sections closer to the Central Pacific (later the Southern Pacific) rail lines, some of which is preserved in the Alkali Flat North Historic District. Cottages with high basements were constructed in the area, primarily during two periods: first in the 1860s and 1870s, and later around 1895. The earlier houses were built in the Italianate style, while the later houses were built in the Queen Anne and Eastlake styles. Among the residents of this section of Alkali Flat was Maria Hastings, a saloon and hotel owner, whose 1860 house at 1119 D Street remains a centerpiece of the neighborhood today.

Sacramento's first streetcar line began operation in 1870 and ran through Alkali Flat along H Street from the Central Pacific Railroad depot to the State Agricultural Society's California State Fairgrounds at 20th and G streets. In 1893, an electric streetcar line that traveled down G Street to McKinley Park replaced the route on H Street. The streetcar service attracted more residential development to Alkali Flat and increased the value of properties located along the line.

As the nineteenth century progressed, the Alkali Flat neighborhood welcomed an increasing number of industries as its population grew and the Central Pacific Railroad, later the Southern Pacific Railroad, gained power at its railyards to the south. Breweries, dairies, grain and lumber mills, and other industries all opened in Alkali Flat, attracting laborers to the area. Meanwhile, civic, academic, and religious institutions were also constructed to meets the needs of the neighborhood's growing and diversifying population. Most of these industrial, civic, religious, and academic establishments have since been demolished.

Alkali Flat's increasing industrialization and the resulting influx of laborers drove many of the original, elite families out to the newer residential neighborhoods and suburbs that were being built to the east of Sacramento's crowded downtown at the turn of the twentieth century. As lower income laborers moved in, many of them immigrants, Alkali Flat's large single-family dwellings were subdivided into smaller units that could be rented out to several families at a time. No new single-family houses appear to have been built after 1910. Subsequent new construction focused primarily on building smaller residential units and apartment buildings to accommodate the neighborhood's growing population of working-class residents.

The Great Depression affected all of Sacramento's main industries, leading to widespread unemployment. Large numbers of workers at the city's canneries, railyards, and state government offices lost their jobs, and transient workers arrived in large numbers in search of seasonal agricultural work. The growing number of homeless and unemployed workers settled in shantytowns that formed along the city's rail lines and levees, which bordered Alkali Flat to the north. One such encampment, called Shooksville, was located near the city incinerator in Alkali Flat and was home to nearly 1,000 people.

Meanwhile, ridership on Sacramento's streetcars was declining and the automobile had increased in popularity. In 1936, streetcar service along G Street ended and was replaced by bus service. The loss of streetcar service removed a vital link between Alkali Flat and the rest of the city, isolating the neighborhood and reducing development and property values.

Alkali Flat's low rents and proximity to downtown's industries and businesses made it a popular destination for immigrants and ethnic minorities after World War II, particularly the city's Mexican- American residents who established a community in the neighborhood. The Royal Chicano Air Force, an art collective founded in 1969, based many of its activities in Alkali Flat and became one of the most dominant and influential groups in Sacramento and the national Chicano art movement.

By the 1970s, Alkali Flat's once-grand nineteenth century houses and buildings were in such a severe state of decay that many were uninhabitable and were demolished. A new movement emerged to preserve the neighborhood's remaining historic architecture, led by local residents and members of the Sacramento Old City Association and Sacramento Heritage, Inc. Much of the neighborhood's existing nineteenth-century architecture has survived as a result of their efforts. In 1972, the Sacramento City Council adopted a redevelopment plan for Alkali Flat, and between 2006 and 2009, $60 million in private and public funding was invested into Alkali Flat in an effort to revitalize the neighborhood. The plan included new residential and transit-oriented development along 12th Street, such as the La Valentina mixed- use development; preservation and rehabilitation of the area's historic housing stock; and promotion of new development while working to enhance existing businesses. Today, the neighborhood remains an ethnically and socioeconomically diverse residential neighborhood, and many of its historic houses have been restored.

Period of Significance: 1852-1936

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Alkali Flat Central Historic District, Alkali Flat North Historic District, Alkali Flat South Historic District, and Alkali Flat West Historic District begins with Sacramento's efforts to rebuild after the fire of 1852 and concludes with the end of streetcar service to the neighborhood in 1936, which increased the neighborhood's isolation from the rest of the city and contributed, along with the effects of the Great Depression, to declining development and investment in the neighborhood. The transition also coincided with Alkali Flat's evolution into a predominately working-class neighborhood.

Architectural Styles: Greek Revival, Gothic Revival, Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Moorish Revival, Federal, Second Empire, Classical Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Folk Victorian, Vernacular

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units, commercial businesses, or institutional buildings • Commercial uses concentrated along 12th Street • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• Predominately one- or two-story houses with Delta-style high basements and raised first story
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically wide-width channel rustic siding, three- or four-tier drop panels, or shingles, often of varying shapes and patterns on gabled ends • One brick building
Roofs	• Predominantly front-facing gabled roofs with some side flat or hipped roofs • Brick chimneys
Windows	• Wood-frame, double-hung windows • Front- and side-facing bay windows
Porches	• Prominent full or half-width porches accessed by a wood staircase
Ornamentation	• Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, and Queen Anne details, including incised brackets under roof eaves; decorative, carved woodwork around windows and doors; slender, turned porch posts and balusters; and patterned shingles on gabled ends
Property Landscape	• Low fences in front of many houses, mostly wood picket or wrought iron, often with brick piers • Some brick patios

Streetscape	• Varying building setback, ranging from no setback in front of the commercial buildings on 12th Street, to generally uniform setback of 20 feet on 11th Street, and more than 100 feet in front of the Maria Hastings House on D Street • Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees— most often sycamore or elm trees—planted in a parking strip along the street curb. • Varying building setback, ranging from no setback in front of the commercial buildings on 12th Street, to generally uniform setback of 20 feet on 11th Street, and more than 100 feet in front of the Maria Hastings House on D Street • Varying sidewalk widths to accommodate large street trees

BOULEVARD PARK HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Boulevard Park Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Boulevard Park Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 4.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 4.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district embody the characteristics of early twentieth-century suburban neighborhood design and residential architecture. In particular, the subdivision's design reflects the principles of the "City Beautiful" movement, which sought to create clean, modern residential neighborhoods in parklike settings. Elements of this design included the arrangement of houses along wide boulevards that were paved, lined with street trees, and landscaped with grassy medians down the center, as well as the creation of "alley parks" and a one-block public park to serve local residents, which add to the historic architectural qualities of the district. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 4.C and 19, the Boulevard Park Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, as houses in the original subdivision were constructed over a relatively short ten-year period from 1905 to 1915 they also represent a cohesive collection of architecture from the early twentieth century. The most popular styles of the period—including Classical Revival, Prairie, and Craftsman—are well-represented in the neighborhood. Larger residencies constructed along G and H Street date from an earlier period (1871-1905) including Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, and Folk Victorian. Despite the variety of architectural styles, the neighborhood possesses a visual consistency, because of deed restrictions and other controls that were put in place to create an overall uniformity of building scale, quality, land use, and street design. This consistency of design and historic architecture survives today.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 4.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 4.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Boulevard Park Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 4.B are located within the Boulevard Park Historic District as shown in Exhibit 4.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 4.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, including common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Folk Victorian, Shingle, Classical Revival, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Beaux Arts, Mission Revival, Spanish Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Art Deco, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular, and Landscape, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 4.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1871 and ends in 1946 and relate to the emergence of residential suburbs to the east of downtown accelerated with the electrification of the city's streetcar system in 1890.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 4.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

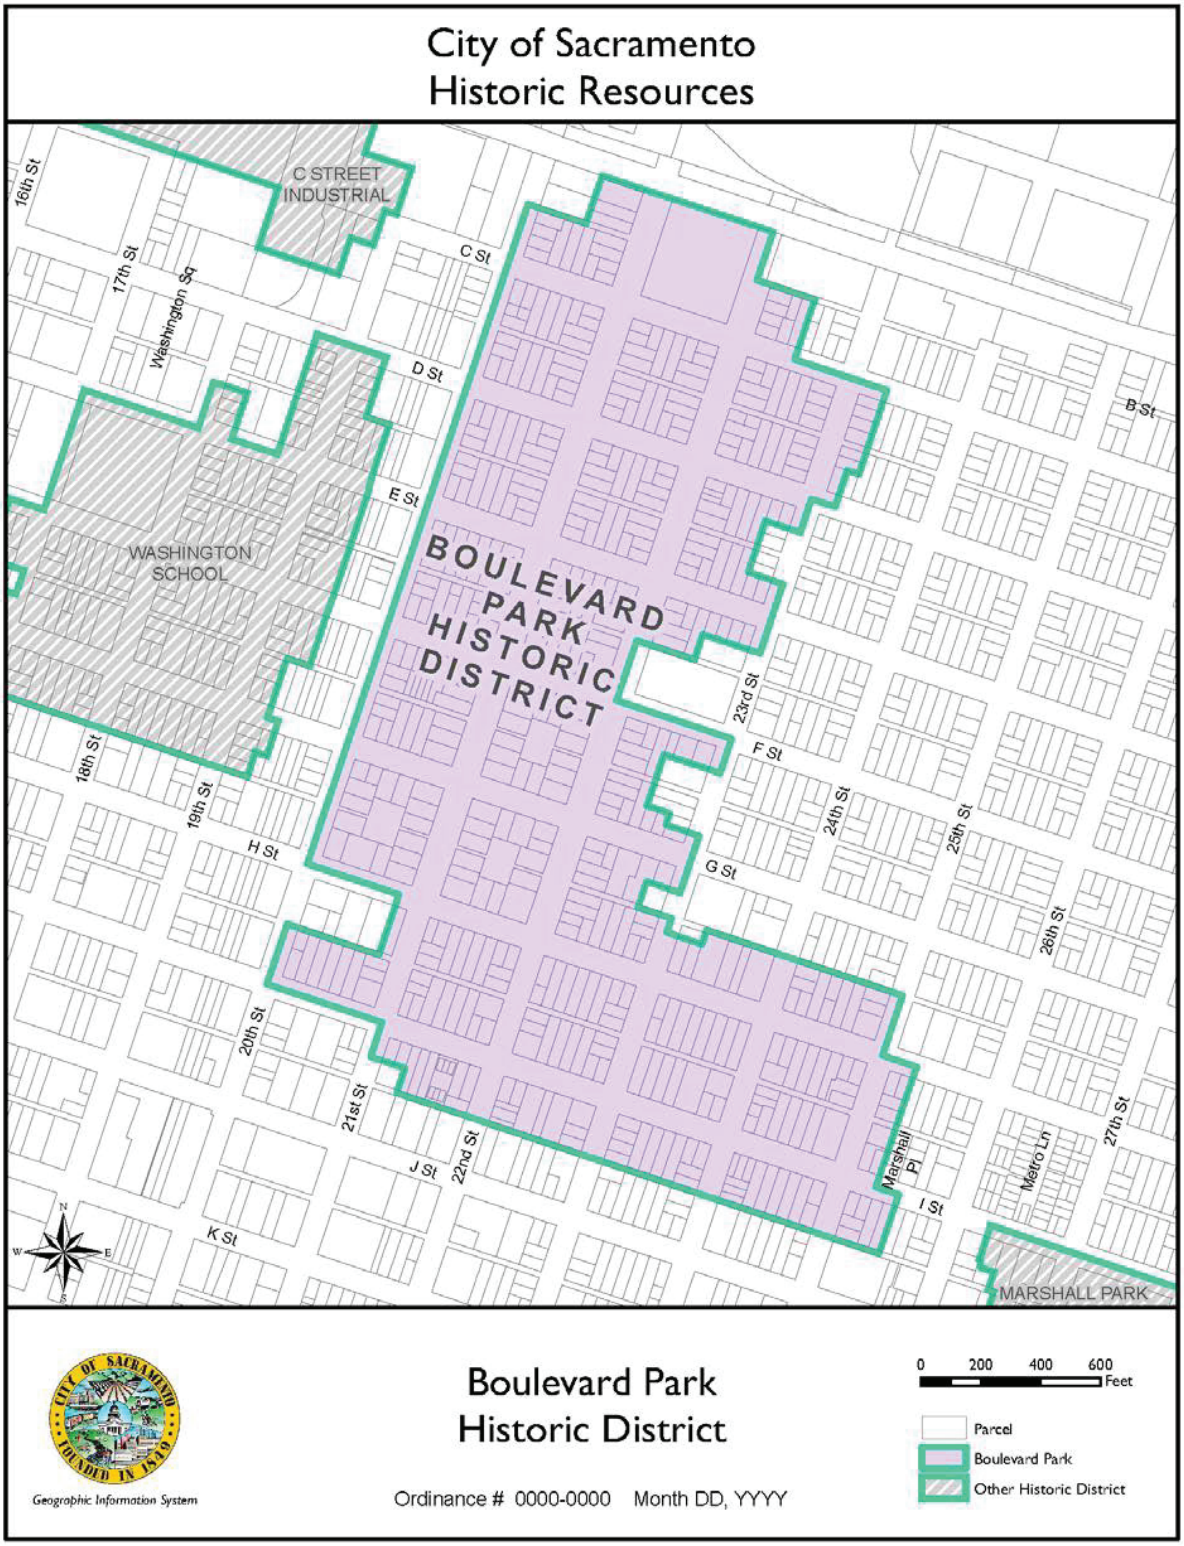

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 4.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 4.C).

Historic Context: Development of the blocks that became Boulevard Park began with the State Agricultural Society's decision to make Sacramento the permanent home of the State Fair in 1861. At that time, a plot of land – bounded by E, H, 20th, and 22nd streets – was set aside as the location for the State Fair's fairgrounds. The fairgrounds included a racetrack and stock grounds and were quickly expanded in 1862 to include an additional six blocks between B, E, 20th, and 22nd streets. A new horse-drawn streetcar line was constructed in 1871 to improve access to the fairgrounds, which brought visitors from the Central Pacific passenger depot downtown to the fairgrounds on H Street.

The start of streetcar service down H Street spurred Sacramento's eastward expansion. Residential development up until this period had been primarily concentrated in the central business district downtown, where the commercial waterfront, railyards, industries, and state government offices were located. The availability of employment opportunities attracted large numbers of people to the downtown area who not only worked in the businesses downtown but often lived in the immediate area. The introduction of streetcars in the late nineteenth century shifted residential development to outlying areas of the city. New residences and businesses, including some of the most prominent homes in Sacramento, sprang up along the streetcar line on H Street. The emergence of residential suburbs to the east of downtown accelerated with the electrification of the city's streetcar system in 1890.

In 1905, the State Fair moved to newer, larger fairgrounds southwest of the city, and the old fairgrounds were sold to the Park Realty Company. The fair's relocation left behind an ideal situation for the creation of a new residential neighborhood: several lots of available land inside the city limits, in an already established neighborhood with ready access to streetcar service, city sewers, and city water supplies. Together with real estate firm Wright and Kimbrough, the company took charge of subdividing and selling lots in the new development. Lots on the southern end, which were closer to the streetcar line, were larger and more expensive than those that were farther north and close to the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks. In a time when zoning restrictions had not yet come into existence, deed restrictions were placed on the four largest blocks in the southern end in order to encourage the creation of a quiet, uniform, residential neighborhood. The restrictions prohibited non-residential development, the construction of multi-family properties, and relocation of older houses. They also stipulated that houses had to be set back twenty-five feet from the sidewalk and no closer than three feet to the lots on either side.

Wright and Kimbrough's design for Boulevard Park also called for several notable landscaped features that reflected the influence of the "City Beautiful" movement, which had been introduced at the Chicago World's Fair in 1893 and sought to create modern, ordered, park-like cities and neighborhoods. In accordance with these principles, Boulevard Park was laid out along two wide boulevards, 21st and 22nd streets, each of which featured landscaped central medians that were planted with Canary Island date palms, Gingko biloba trees, and Mexican fan palms. The streets were also lined with landscaped parking strips in which rows of street trees were planted. English elms and sycamores were the most common trees planted along the streets, but other vegetation was also used. Among the most innovative elements of plans for the subdivision was the decision to create small 100 by 140-foot parks in the center alleys behind the four largest blocks on the subdivision's south end. Ultimately, only three of these "alley parks" were completed, all of which have survived in the present historic district. Additional greenspace was provided by turning a block between C, B, 21st, and 22nd streets, which had been donated to the City by John A. Sutter Jr. in the nineteenth century for use as a public plaza, into Grant Park.

Boulevard Park's "City Beautiful" design also integrated Progressive reform ideals. While lots on the development's southern edge, which were larger and closer to the streetcar lines, were intended to attract affluent residents, the smaller, less expensive lots on its northern edge offered working-class residents the opportunity to enjoy the benefits of suburban living at an affordable price. In addition, the subdivision enjoyed access to modern amenities, such as paved streets and sidewalks, modern plumbing, and use of the city's sewers and water lines.

Wright and Kimbrough's designs for a quiet, pastoral neighborhood were impeded by the expansion of streetcar and railroad services, which brought more noise and industrial development to the area. In 1907, the main freight line of the Northern Electric Railway began operation down C Street through Boulevard Park and added a second streetcar line as part of the lease agreement. Two years later, the Western Pacific Railroad opened a new transcontinental line that ran between 19th and 20th streets. As a result, several light industrial businesses were built on lots adjacent to the B Street rail line at the neighborhood's northern edge. In spite of the disruption, the neighborhood was almost completely built up by 1915.

Because most of the parcels in Boulevard Park were developed during a relatively short and condensed period of time between 1905 and 1915, houses in the neighborhood were primarily built in the Arts and Crafts and Revival styles that were popular in the early twentieth century. Many of these were constructed in the Foursquare style, creating a unique concentration of these housing types in Sacramento.

Over the subsequent decades, several duplexes, apartments, and flats were constructed and a few older houses that predated the neighborhood were moved into Boulevard Park. Although these buildings did not conform to the original developer's intention to create a neighborhood with a uniform character and design, the newly introduced buildings were compatible in scale and character to the rest of the neighborhood. In the decades after World War II, the end of streetcar service to the area in 1946 and exodus of affluent residents from the city center to suburbs outside the city limits transformed Boulevard Park from a mixed-income suburb into a working class neighborhood.

Period of Significance: 1871-1946

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Boulevard Park Historic District begins with the establishment of the streetcar line on H Street in 1871, which spurred early residential development in the area, and concludes with the end of streetcar service to the area in 1946.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Folk Victorian, Shingle, Classical Revival, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Beaux Arts, Mission Revival, Spanish Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Art Deco, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular, Landscape

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Historically single-family homes, some converted into multi-family units, interspersed with apartment buildings and courtyard apartments dating to the period of significance • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• Generally larger houses south of G Street—three stories with or without a basement is common • Generally smaller houses on blocks north of F Street—mostly one story or one story with a raised basement Craftsman Bungalows or Neoclassical Rowhouses, interspersed with Minimal Traditional-style homes outside of the period of significance • Classic Box-style homes on 21st and 22nd streets between F and H streets, and along H and I streets near former streetcar routes • Largest, most elaborate houses located on the corners of blocks on 21st and 22nd streets
Mass & Form (continued)	• Older, Victorian-era homes to the south of the Boulevard Park subdivision that were likely part of an earlier phase of development linked to the H Street streetcar line, the Union Park racetrack, and State Fair grounds • Some large apartment buildings built within the period of significance scattered throughout the district
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically false bevel, narrow width channel rustic, and lap siding; brick; or stucco
Roofs	• Front-facing gabled, cross-gabled, and hipped roofs, often with dormers • Low-pitch or flat rooflines on homes within the Boulevard Park subdivision boundaries • Prominent clinker brick chimneys
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircases leading to primary entrances above a high basement • Terrazzo, wood, concrete, cast stone, or brick stairs • Paneled wood doors framed with side and transom windows
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung, casement, paired, ribbon, cottage, and leaded glass windows • Single and multi-story bay windows
Porches	• Full, half, or central porches with overhangs supported by classical, square tapered, paired, and turned columns • Second-story balconies directly above first-story porches
Ornamentation	• Patterned shingles on the gabled ends, dormers, and portions of siding • Classical Revival details, including fluted pilasters, columns, dentils, and pedimented porticoes • Craftsman details, including wide overhanging eaves, exposed rafter tails, wood braces, tapered square columns, and low shed dormers • Apartment buildings with flat metal and swirled colored glass awnings over central entrance

Property Landscape	• Large, sloping front lawns • Brick patios with herringbone pattern and decorative cement grates • 12- to 16-foot-deep yards within the Boulevard Park subdivision boundaries • 20-foot-deep yards on H Street • Three alley parks behind homes facing 21st and 22nd streets near the southern terminus of the Boulevard Park subdivisions
Streetscape	• Landscaped 16-foot-wide boulevard medians down the center of 21st and 22nd streets • Ginkgo trees in middle sections of boulevard medians, bookended by palms on north and south ends • Rows of palms lining H Street

C STREET COMMERCIAL HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the C Street Commercial Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The C Street Commercial Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 5.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 5.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their development as transportation-oriented commercial and industrial buildings from the early- to mid-twentieth century. The buildings on C Street between 12th and 13th form a particularly cohesive grouping. Built in a vernacular One-Part Commercial Block style, these one-story brick buildings feature low pitched or flat roofs and minimal ornamental detailing, limited primarily to roofline cornices bracketed with simple parapets. The buildings have large windows on their principal C Street facades and central entrances. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 5.C and 19, the C Street Commercial Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as buildings display a general uniformity of age, scale, materials, and style and show minimal alterations. Together, they form a cohesive grouping that reflects the transportation-oriented character of the 12th and C Street corridors from the early to mid-twentieth century. The design of these buildings also reflects their orientation toward automobile-based trades and services. With the exception of the property at the corner of 12th and C streets, the buildings occupy the front portion of each parcel, facing C Street, while the back portions along Chinatown Alley contain open parking lots. Garage doors on the front and rear facades would have given automobiles easy access to the buildings, either for service or to load and unload goods. Even those buildings that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 5.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 5.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the C Street Commercial Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 5.B are located within the C Street Commercial Historic District as shown in Exhibit 5.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 5.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Vernacular, Commercial Styles (One-Part Commercial Block), which add to the historic architectural qualities of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 5.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1920 and ends in 1930 and relate to the development of C Street as an automotive and freight transportation corridor in Sacramento from the early to mid-twentieth century.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 5.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 5.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 5.C).

Historic Context: The C Street Commercial Historic District preserves a small row of brick buildings that reflect the commercial and industrial character of Sacramento's northwest corner in the first half of the twentieth century. 12th Street has long been one of Sacramento's principal transportation, communication, and commercial corridors. During the Gold Rush, it operated as one of the early routes from the city to the gold fields of C Street, meanwhile, developed into one of the city's industrial hubs. Early in the city's history, the 1200 block of C Street was part of Alkali Flat, Sacramento's oldest standing residential neighborhood. While the neighborhood initially attracted the city's elite residents, Alkali Flat became increasingly industrial toward the turn of the century due to its proximity to the Central Pacific (later the Southern Pacific) depot and railroad tracks. Many of these industrial businesses were located along the railroad tracks that formed the neighborhood's northwest corner along B Street. By 1915, the north side of C Street consisted of two grain and flour mills and warehouses that were used to store agricultural implements and wine.

Alkali Flat's increasing industrialization and the resulting influx of laborers drove its affluent middle- and upper-class residents out to the newer residential neighborhoods that were developing to the south and east. Meanwhile, the automobile was becoming increasingly popular in the first decades of the Interurban railroads also contributed to the development of C Street. In 1928, Sacramento's interurban railroads combined into a single entity: the Sacramento Northern. In addition to passenger service, the Sacramento Northern interurban railroad also carried freight on an industrial belt line that traveled around the edge of the city. A portion of this freight line ran along C Street from 18th Street to 31st Street to serve the industrial areas along the city's based industries to those based on long-distance freight truck shipping.

In the 1960s, a number of factors pulled transportation and shipping-related activity away from C Street. In 1963, a deep-sea channel opened at the Port of Sacramento, shifting trucking and shipping activity to West Sacramento. Construction of a new system of interstate highways that circumnavigated the city proceeded through from the 1950s to 1970s, pulling automotive and trucking traffic away from older transportation corridors through the city center.
Although the industrial businesses that characterized the western portion of C Street in the first half of the twentieth century have closed, the area's transportation and automobile-oriented use has persisted into the twenty-first century. The 1920s-era brick buildings between 12th and 13th streets continue to be used for commercial purposes and include a specialty automobile repair and supply shop on the corner of 12th and C Streets.

Period of Significance: 1920-1930

Architectural Styles: Vernacular, Commercial Styles (One-Part Commercial Block)

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Commercial businesses related to transportation industries
Mass & Form	• Buildings one story in height • Simple, utilitarian architectural design with rectangular plans • Horizontal massing
Cladding	• Brick cladding
Roofs	• Flat or low-pitched gabled roofs
Entries & Doors	• Central, first-story entrances with transoms • Occasional diagonal corner entrances
Windows	• Steel frame picture and multi-lite windows • Transom windows • Large shopfront windows on first stories
Ornamentation	• Square or stepped parapets • Utilitarian design with minimal ornamentation • Features associated with transportation such as garage doors, driveways, and/or vehicular shipping docks and bays, often with rolling metal doors facing the street or alley and concrete tire guards at entrances
Property Landscape	• Minimal or no property landscaping
Streetscape	• Minimal or no street trees—those that exist are medium-sized • Minimal or no setback from sidewalk • Raised driveways leading to garage doors • Large paved areas for automobile or truck parking

"C" STREET INDUSTRIAL PRESERVATION AREA

The parcels which fall within the boundaries of the proposed preservation area are listed below. The parcels are grouped by block number, then the full Assessor's parcel number is given, next the street address of the property and the status of the property within the proposed preservation area is given.

Attachment two, is a map of the proposed preservation area, which gives the boundaries of the area and the block number of each block (123). Street addresses are given for properties within a preservation area that are adjacent to a boundary line when that boundary line falls between any two parcels within a block. Otherwise, the boundary line for a preservation area runs down the center of a street or alley.

C" Street Industrial Preservation Area

This Preservation Area reflects Sacramento's role in the architectural industry of the Sacramento Valley and of California. The buildings vary in style from Vernacular Industrial to Moderne and in time from 1914 to 1938. Slight Classical ornamentation is found on the earlier building with the streamline look found on the newer buildings.

The boundaries are defined by the railway tracks to the north, a City park to the west, residential to the east, and surface parking, new commercial and residential to the south.

EXHIBIT 7

CAPITOL HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Capitol Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Capitol Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 7.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 7.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development by their association with Sacramento's role as the state capitol of California and the physical development of the Capitol building and Capitol Park. The majority of the buildings and contributing resources in the district were constructed for the purpose of housing the various offices, meeting chambers, libraries, storage spaces, and other facilities of the California state government. The Classical Revival design of the Capitol building, constructed between 1860 and 1874, heavily influenced the design of the government buildings that were built around Capitol Park as the role and function of the California state government expanded in the twentieth century. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 7.C and 19, the Capitol Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association with the early period of state government-related development that took place in Sacramento in the late nineteenth century until the 1950s in response to the rapid and continuous expansion of the California state government. The presence of the Capitol building also heavily influenced the architectural style and orientation of these newer state government buildings, which were designed to complement the Neoclassical style Capitol, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 7.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 7.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Capitol Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 7.B are located within the Capitol Historic District as shown in Exhibit 7.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

As shown in Exhibits 7.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Classical Revival, Neoclassical, Beaux Arts, Italian Renaissance, Streamline Moderne, and Late Moderne, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 7.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1860 and ends in 1957 and relate to the establishment of Sacramento as the State Capitol and the growth of state government in the first half of the twentieth century.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 7.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 7.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 7.C).

Exhibit 7.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: Sacramento was chosen as the state capital of California in 1854 because of its central location, accessibility by steamships traveling up the Sacramento River, and the availability of accommodations for state legislators. In order to lure the capital to Sacramento amid fierce competition from other cities, the Sacramento City Council offered the state a public plaza on the block between I, J, 9th, and 10th streets (now Cesar Chavez Park) to serve as the site for the new State Capitol building. A lack of funding and lawsuits over the legality of the arrangement prevented the capitol from being constructed on the plaza, forcing the City to identify a new site for the building. In 1860, a new, four-block site, bounded by L, N, 10th, and 12th streets, was deeded to the state for the construction of the state capitol. The new site was advantageously located two blocks away from the city's business district and centered on M Street (later renamed Capitol Avenue), the city's widest street.

Groundbreaking for the California State Capitol building, designed by architect Reuben Clark, took place in 1860. The Classical Revival style building was designed to house the chambers of the state's legislative, executive, and judicial branches. Construction progressed slowly because of funding and supply shortages during the Civil War and devastating floods during the winter of 1861-1862, which required the building's foundation to be raised by six feet. Government activity began in the new building in 1869, although the building wasn't finally declared complete until 1874.

In the meantime, the Board of State Capitol Commissioners, which had been created to oversee the project, decided that the Capitol grounds should be expanded to create a suitably grand and parklike setting for the new capitol building. The resulting Capitol Park would occupy ten city blocks between L, N, 10th, and 15th streets. The commissioners first acquired the block between L, N, 14th, and 15th streets in 1870 to serve as the site for the future governor's mansion and then began the process of acquiring the remaining five blocks to the east of the Capitol. The last block became part of Capitol Park in 1872. The governor's mansion was completed on the northeast corner of the park as planned; however, no governor ever lived there, because legislators refused to fund decorations or furnishings for it. The building was converted into the State Printing Office and later demolished in the 1920s.

The landscaping of Capitol Park proceeded through the 1870s. By the end of the decade, its lawns were considered to be "unsurpassed in the State," and were "the subject of praise by all strangers visiting the State's property." The park was planted with 800 trees and flowering shrubs and designed in a typical Victorian style, with lanes laid out between beds of annual flowers and an elliptical carriage drive between the Capitol building, State Printing Office, and the Agricultural Pavilion, which was built on the southeast corner of the park in 1884 as an exhibition hall for the annual state fair. Surviving English elm and California fan palms that were planted along the carriage path preserve its route through the present- day park.

The construction of the Capitol grounds coincided with Sacramento's gradual expansion eastward and increased the value of surrounding properties in what was then considered to be the outskirts of town. By 1895, rows of wood-framed, single-family houses filled the parcels surrounding Capitol Park. As the city's population continued to grow at the start of the twentieth century, many of these single-family houses were converted into flats or apartment buildings that could accommodate multiple families. Purpose- built apartment buildings were also constructed during this period. The Thayer Apartments and Lewis Apartments, completed in 1914 and 1925, respectively, are remnants of the residential character of the blocks surrounding Capitol Park in the early twentieth century. The elegant apartment buildings attracted high-ranking government officials, such as the superintendent of the state motor vehicle department and the governor's private stenographer, who chose to create a family home there.

Just as the city continued to grow, so did the California state government. By the 1910s, it was apparent that the State was in desperate need of additional facilities, and in 1917, the two blocks directly to the west of the State Capitol were acquired for the purpose of building new spaces for the State Supreme Court, State Library, and other scattered state departments. Construction began on the Library and Courts building and State Office Building No. 1 in 1922, and they were in use by 1928. The buildings' Neoclassical design, orientation along the central axis of M Street, and cohesive landscaping of fan palms reflected the influence of the City Beautiful Movement as well as the intention that this new "Capitol Extension Group" be considered part of Capitol Park.

Although construction slowed throughout the city during the Great Depression, the 1930s were a period of significant development on the blocks surrounding the Capitol thanks to federal funding and city planning efforts that allowed state government construction to continue through the decade. Between 1936 and 1939, the Department of Motor Vehicles Building, Department of Public Works Building, and Business and Professional Building were all constructed on the south side of N Street in a variation of the Streamline Moderne style, sometimes known as Public Works Administration (PWA) Moderne, that is characteristic of public buildings constructed during the Great Depression.

The state government expanded rapidly in the 1940s to meet the demands of World War II, creating a larger demand for additional government facilities in the postwar period. In 1949, the Capitol's original nineteenth-century apse was removed as part of the construction of the East Annex, which created new office space for the governor and other state officials. Still, more space was needed. In the 1950s, additional multi-story annexes were added to the rear of the Depression-era government buildings on N Street. The last of these annexes was constructed in 1957 for the Department of Veteran Affairs. Although they were constructed almost two decades later, these new annexes reflected the style and massing of the earlier buildings on N Street and represented the last state government buildings constructed around the perimeter of Capitol Park until the twenty-first century.

The 1950s marked a major shift of state government- related development, as the construction of new state buildings moved west to blocks surrounding Capitol Mall. The completion of a grand row of modern state government buildings along the street was part of a redevelopment plan to turn the West End neighborhood, which the Sacramento Redevelopment Agency had identified as blighted, into a grand entrance to the Capitol grounds. In 1950, the area west of the Capitol Extension Group was designated as Redevelopment Area No. 1, and the construction of new state government offices along Capitol Mall began shortly thereafter.

The building boom of the 1950s did not bring an end to the State's constant need for more space. By the 1970s, the East Annex was full, and additional space for government offices was once again needed. State officials considered demolishing the Capitol building and replacing it with an entirely new building, but ultimately decided to restore the original nineteenth- century building. In 1975 and 1980, the State passed bills to restore the Capitol, the largest restoration project in North America at the time. After six years of work, the building reopened in 1982.

Period of Significance: 1860-1957

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Capitol Historic District begins with the start of construction on the State Capitol building in 1860, includes the construction of the Capitol building's East Annex in 1951, and ends with the completion of the Veterans Affairs building at 1227 O Street in 1957.

Architectural Styles: Classical Revival, Neoclassical, Beaux Arts, Italian Renaissance, Streamline Moderne, Late Moderne

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Predominately large, institutional/civic buildings mixed with a smaller number of high-style multi-family apartment, commercial, and recreational buildings situated around Capitol Park
Mass & Form	• Buildings generally two- to seven-stories tall, with none taller than the Capitol building • H-shaped building plans • Monumental scale • Frontages of state government buildings often extend nearly the full-width of an entire block • Privately-owned buildings built on narrow parcels more characteristic of the rest of the city • State government buildings horizontally massed with wide, street-facing frontages • Apartment buildings more often vertically massed • Symmetrical facades with prominent central entrances, often flanked by long wings with evenly-spaced rows of windows and doors
Cladding & Foundation	• Predominately granite, stone, stucco, or painted cement
Roofs	• Dome and dual pitched hipped roof of the Capitol • Predominately flat roofs with low parapets • Few steeply pitched hipped roofs covered with red clay tiles

Entries & Doors	• Paneled wood or metal-framed doors with integrated glazing • Most entries centrally located
Windows	• Long, narrow casement, double-hung, or picture windows with steel or wood frames
Ornamentation	• Decorative stone, terracotta, or copper ornamentation • Classical Revival and Neoclassical design details, including architraves, friezes, cornices, and pediments with figural statuary supported by evenly spaced rows of Ionic or Corinthian columns; pilasters; arched windows; cornice line dentil courses; egg and dart molding; acroterion, and rusticated bases • Italian Renaissance style details, overhanging eaves supported by decorative brackets, round arches above doors or porches, entrances accented by small classical columns or pilasters, and rusticated first stories • Streamline Moderne style details, such as flat metal awnings with rounded corners, metal casement and glass block windows arranged in long, continuous bands
Property Landscape	• Orderly arrangement of trees in front of the principal, west-facing façade of the Capitol building, beginning with the row of California fan palms along the street, followed by camellia trees planted along the sidewalk; large, mature deodar cedars on the sloping lawn, and southern magnolias and low, shaped hedges on the last tier on the front of the Capitol • Clusters of smaller palm tree varieties at corners of Capitol building • Grove of coast redwoods along rear of Capitol building • Park planted with a wide variety of native and non-native trees but generally dominated by varieties of redwood, cedars, magnolia, cypress, camphor, oak, and citrus trees • Surviving English Elm and California Fan Palms planted along the nineteenth-century carriage path in Capitol Park • Landscaping punctuated by free-standing monuments, memorials, and memorial garden, and iconic fountian
	• Capitol Extension Group grounds planted with a variety of cedar, cypress, redwood, juniper, and camphor trees and situated around a circular, central fountain and traffic roundabout
Streetscape	• Buildings oriented to face a central axis formed by the Capitol Mall, Capitol building, and Capitol Avenue • Perimeter of Capitol Park and L and N streets lined with evenly-spaced rows of California fan palms, planted in six- foot-wide parking strip, around perimeter • Principal paths at main east-west axis along the line of the Capitol Mall and corresponding to north-south line of city streets with smaller spurs of meandering paths running at diagonals • Eight-foot-wide sidewalks around perimeter of Capitol Park • Low, rounded curbs around Capitol Park with some granite curbs on N Street

CATHEDRAL SQUARE HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Cathedral Square Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Cathedral Square Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 8.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 8.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as part of a representative grouping of many of the most popular architectural styles for commercial, civic, and institutional buildings from the 1890s to 1940s, including Italian Renaissance, Beaux Arts, Prairie, and Art Deco. The buildings were constructed along K Street, historically Sacramento's primary commercial and entertainment thoroughfare, between two of the city's most prominent landmarks: the State Capitol building and the Cathedral of the Blessed Sacrament. The commercial buildings in the district echo the grandeur and prestige of these buildings in their scale, massing, and use of materials. The combination of shared features further enhances the unity of the overall composition of buildings. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 8.C and 19, the Cathedral Square Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a representative grouping of many of the most popular architectural styles for commercial, civic, and institutional buildings from the 1890s to 1940s, including Italian Renaissance, Beaux Arts, Prairie, and Art Deco, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 8.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 8.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Cathedral Square Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 8.B are located within the Cathedral Square Historic District as shown in Exhibit 8.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

As shown in Exhibits 8.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italian Renaissance, Beaux Arts, Prairie, Art Deco, and Streamline Moderne, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 8.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1868 and ends in 1949 and relate not only K Street's development into Sacramento's premier cultural, retail, and entertainment corridor, but also Sacramento's emergence as a major metropolitan city during the first half of the twentieth century.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 8.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 8.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 8.C).

Historic Context: K Street has been one of the most heavily trafficked business corridors in all of Sacramento since the city was platted. During the Gold Rush, argonauts arrived by riverboat at the western terminus of K Street where the city met the Sacramento River. While neighboring J Street established itself as the primary route leading to the gold fields in the foothills of the Sierras, K Street was associated with California's fledgling stagecoach network. For this reason, K Street had a running start to becoming the commercial core of the city.

Businesses and homes rapidly spread eastward during the early years of settlement, but expansion was not without its obstacles. The crippling floods of 1861 and 1862, which left much of Sacramento underwater, convinced city officials to prioritize improved public infrastructure. Moving more-or-less west to east over the course of a decade, streets were raised to the level of Plaza Park (now Cesar Chavez Park), the highest point within the developed portion of the street grid. The elevated streetscape resulted in hollow sidewalks, sections of which are confirmed to be intact at 1013 K Street.

The evolution of the city's streetcar system also played an important role in molding K Street into a powerful commercial force during the late nineteenth century. Sacramento's first mule-drawn streetcar line, started circa 1858, travelled from the intersection of Front and K streets to the Sacramento Valley Railroad depot at 3rd and R streets. The enterprise was short-lived, for its tracks were destroyed by the flood of 1861. The first permanent streetcar did not appear until Sacramento's downtown streets had been raised. The City Street Railway was established on August 20, 1870. Its course began at the Central Pacific Railroad depot on Front Street and followed K Street eastward to the intersection of 9th Street where it proceeded north to H Street. This route solidified K Street's status as Sacramento's "Main Street."

K Street also attracted civic and institutional development. In 1889, the Cathedral of the Blessed Sacrament was constructed at the intersection of K and 11th streets. Reverend Patrick Manogue, a native of Ireland, was appointed Bishop of the newly formed Diocese of Sacramento in 1886. His personal ambition was to build a cathedral modeled after the Holy Trinity church of Paris. Its site and design were deliberately chosen to compliment the Capitol building, located one block to the south. San Francisco architect Bryan J. Clinch was selected for the project. The massive basilica-form structure features an imposing central tower, rounded arch entrances and windows, and a broad dome atop the nave. Being the second tallest building in the city after the Capitol at that time, the grand church represented not only a triumph for local Catholics, but a symbol of civic pride for all Sacramentans.

By 1895, the area was still a patchwork of multi-family dwellings and small commercial structures. Not surprisingly, the supremacy of the horse-drawn travel was visible within the district. The majority of businesses, particularly those at the intersections of 11th and K streets, were related to the sale or repair of carriages and wagons. To the east of 11th Street, the district was occupied by the cathedral, the Christian Brothers School, and residences. As the focus of Sacramento's retail and entertainment activity moved eastward from the waterfront, shops and frame houses were replaced by larger commercial structures. By the turn of the century, the epicenter of Sacramento's commercial activity was shifting away from the "wholesale district" of the West End to more desirable locations near the Capitol.

Financial prosperity and patriotism during World War I combined to redefine the built fabric of downtown Sacramento during the first three decades of the twentieth century. By 1915, the wagon shops had disappeared from the district, carriage houses on alleys had been converted to automobile garages, and standalone houses were few and far between. Three industries dominated the area during this era of growth: hotels, department stores, and theaters. Because of their proximity to state offices, lodgings such as the Howe Apartments, the Hotel Regis, and the Senator provided a "rendezvous for legislators." It was commonplace for government representatives to make semi-permanent homes in the hotels adjacent to the Capitol grounds during legislative sessions. Likewise, the Weinstock, Lubin & Co. department store (constructed on the site of the Christian Brothers School at 1130 K Street) and the Empress Theatre (later known as the Hippodrome and Crest Theatre) designated this section of K Street as Sacramento's fashionable shopping and entertainment destination for the masses.

In keeping with the area's heightened sense of refinement and expounding off the highly-stylized Cathedral of the Blessed Sacrament, the buildings constructed during this early twentieth-century period took inspiration from the latest trends and famous European examples. The design of Weinstock's, for instance, was based on the well- known Parisian department store Le Printemps. The exterior's terracotta and marble tile cladding, ornamental medallions, abundant display windows, and impressive central vault entrance contribute to the building's stately presence at the corner of K and 12th streets.

Over the next fifty years, the area underwent several dramatic transformations in the face of economic downturns, world wars, and the ubiquitous flight to the suburbs. The Great Depression put a pause on Sacramento's building boom. Though activity never completely ceased, retailers were forced to recast their business strategies for a cost-conscious market. Department stores directed their focus away from European finery towards American products, brands, and popular culture. K Street establishments gradually recovered, and sales returned to their pre- Depression average by the mid-1930s. Defense-related industries tied to World War II stimulated the local economy during the following decade, and the postwar period brought renewed commercial spending to downtown.

During the mid-twentieth century, migration to newer residential neighborhoods, increased automobile ownership, and the construction of suburban malls and theaters led to a creeping decline in urban commercial activity. By 1947, the city's extensive streetcar network was fully dismantled. Seeking to compete with new entertainment venues opening in suburban developments, the Hippodrome Theater was renovated to include modern amenities, such as air conditioning, and reopened as the Crest Theatre in 1949. The Crest was one of the last theaters to open on K Street and one of the last to remain in operation.

In 1955, K and L streets were converted into one- way thoroughfares, connecting the Tower Bridge to U.S. Route 40. Finally in 1968, Interstates 5 and 80 were completed through downtown Sacramento and resulted in the diversion of automobile traffic away from the city to outlying areas.

Concerns regarding the future of Sacramento's downtown led to a series of redevelopment projects during the 1960s and 1970s. The K Street pedestrian mall, constructed in 1969 between 7th Street and 13th Street, rendered the district closed to automobile traffic, entirely. The reimagined landscape sought to attract visitors with walkable outdoor spaces, public art, and a wide selection of shops and restaurants. In the manner of the bygone streetcars, the Sacramento Regional Transit Light Rail was installed on K Street in 1987. Though the area has never fully regained its prominence as the regional commercial center of the Sacramento Valley, the area's many offices, shops, and entertainment venues cater to the individuals who live, work, and visit downtown.

Period of Significance: 1868-1949

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Cathedral Square Historic District begins with the raising of the district's streets in 1868 and ends with the reconfiguration of the Hippodrome as the Crest Theatre in 1949. The Crest represents one of the last theaters to open on K Street, as urban venues found it increasingly difficult to compete with their suburban counterparts. The Crest also serves as an architectural bookend for the district, exhibiting many characteristic features of the Art Deco and Late Moderne styles.

Architectural Styles: Italian Renaissance, Beaux Arts, Prairie, Art Deco, Streamline Moderne

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• A mix of civic, commercial, and residential buildings • Historically commercial and recreational buildings primarily situated along K Street • Hotels and apartments located on 11th and L streets
Mass & Form	• Vertically-oriented Two- and Three-Part Block commercial buildings on L Street facing the Capitol grounds • Horizontally-oriented Two- and Three-Part Block commercial buildings on the primary K Street thoroughfare • Symmetrical facades • Central placement of the Cathedral of the Blessed Sacrament within the district
Cladding	• Predominately brick, stone, terracotta, or stucco • Decorative cladding on primary façade(s) and raw, exposed cladding, usually brick or concrete block, on side or rear facades

Roofs	• Predominately flat rooflines, often with a straight-line parapet or broad overhanging eaves and ornamented soffits • Domed roofs of the cathedral • Red clay tiles on some roof overhangs
Entries & Doors	• Wide, recessed entrances facing K and L streets • Smaller entrance porticos facing numbered streets
Windows	• Large shopfront display windows, some topped with bands of multi-lite transoms • Wood-frame casement and double-hung sash windows on upper stories
Ornamentation	• Classical Revival details, including fluted columns and pilasters, balustrades, dentils, pedimented window hoods, circular medallions, cartouches, and niches • Italian Renaissance details, including widely overhanging eaves supported by decorative brackets, round arches above doors or porches, entrances accented by small classical columns or pilasters, and rusticated first stories • Masks and animal figureheads • Abstracted botanical details incorporated into friezes, column capitals, brackets, and framing around vestibules, doors, and windows • Prairie and Art Deco geometric patterns and vertical motifs • Neon signs and marquees above primary entrances and at building corners • Lighted metal awnings and canopies at the street level • Ghost signs on exposed brick surfaces
Property Landsca	• Minimal or no property landscaping
Streetscape	• Rows of young deciduous trees planted in parking strips and planter boxes lining the sidewalks • Minimal or no setback • Unobstructed views of the Capitol looking south on 11th Street • Extant hollow sidewalks and sunken alleyways dating to the street raising campaigns of the 1860s

EAST END HISTORIC DISTRICT (FORMALLY CAPITOL AVENUE)

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the East End Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The East End Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 9.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 9.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development with its concentration of houses and commercial buildings that were constructed in Sacramento's East End while the State Capitol grounds were completed in the late nineteenth century and the city continued to expand outward in the early twentieth century. The houses in the district reflect common and popular architectural styles during this period with minimal modern intrusions, while the concentration of commercial buildings along Capitol Avenue (formerly M Street) reflect the street's evolution into the entrance to the Capitol grounds and a major transportation corridor through the city. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 9.C and 19, the East End Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association with its concentration of houses and commercial buildings that were constructed in Sacramento's East End while the State Capitol grounds were completed in the late nineteenth century and the city continued to expand outward in the early twentieth century. The houses in the district reflect common and popular architectural styles during this period with minimal modern intrusions, while the concentration of commercial buildings along Capitol Avenue (formerly M Street) reflect the street's evolution into the entrance to the Capitol grounds and a major transportation corridor through the city, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 99, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Historic District Name.

The Capitol Avenue Historic District is hereby renamed the East End Historic District.

SECTION 3. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 9.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 9.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the East End Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 9.B are located within the East End Historic District as shown in Exhibit 9.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 9.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as National, Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Shingle, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, French Eclectic, Beaux Arts, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Revival, Monterey, Classic Box, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular, Landscape, Commercial Styles: One-Part Commercial Block, and Two-Part Commercial Block, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 9.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1874 and ends in 1939 and are associated with the development of new residential neighborhoods to the east of Sacramento's waterfront business district as a result of the expansion of the city's streetcar system and introduction of new amenities in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 9.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 9.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 9.C).

Exhibit 9.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The East End Historic District preserves a mixed-use neighborhood within Sacramento's larger Midtown area, located immediately to the east of the State Capitol grounds. Capitol Avenue was laid out as part of the city's original street grid in 1848. Then known as M Street, it was designed to be Sacramento's widest street; while the rest of the city's streets were 80 feet wide, M Street was planned to measure 100 feet across.

When Sacramento became California's state capital in 1854, M Street's grand scale made it the ideal location for the state's new State Capitol building, which began construction on the four blocks around M Street between L, N, 10th, and 12th streets in 1860. In 1872, six additional city blocks were added to the east of the State Capitol grounds to create Capitol Park. Local newspapers declared the 30-acre public park to be "a great ornament" to the city of Sacramento that "would certainly enhance the cash value of the property surrounding it."

The areas to the east and south of the city's waterfront business district were initially sparely populated, but in the late nineteenth century, overcrowding and the introduction of modern amenities—such as streetcars, paved streets, and public parks—attracted Sacramentans to begin moving to undeveloped parcels to the east. As the local newspapers predicted, the completion of the State Capitol building and Capitol Park were two such amenities that brought new residents to the area in the 1870s. The increase in development in the area toward the end of the nineteenth century coincided with transportation improvements. In 1891, the Street Improvement Company graveled P Street. The group of "enterprising citizens" sought no payment for their work and "made it possible to have many miles of street work done at a reasonable figure." The following year, construction began on a new streetcar line, which ran down P Street from 3rd Street to 28th Street. By 1900, an additional line had been constructed along M Street to 28th Street.

Access to streetcar service increased the desirability and accessibility of land east of the Capitol, an area which became known as the East End. Sanborn maps show that by 1895, single-family houses filled almost all of the lots in the East End immediately to the east and south of the Capitol. The predominately residential neighborhood was interspersed with family-owned businesses, such as the East End Cash Store at the corner of 18th and M streets, which featured shopfronts on the first story and residences for the shop owners on the second story. The Eagle Winery was located on several parcels on 18th Street between P Street and O streets.

The arrival of the Western Pacific Railroad in Sacramento in the first decade of the twentieth century further impacted the neighborhood's development. In 1907, the railroad company received the right to build a second set of transcontinental railroad tracks through the city on an 80-foot right-of-way between 19th and 20th streets. Freight service began on the new rail line in 1909, and passenger service followed a year later.

By 1915, many single-family houses on the blocks adjacent to the railroad tracks had been converted into apartments, flats, boarding houses, or housekeeping rooms that could accommodate multiple families. The four blocks between M, O, 17th, and 19th streets alone contained eight houses that had been adapted into housekeeping rooms. Accommodations such as these typically served single men or women who had fallen on hard times financially, but unlike individuals in similar circumstances in the West End, were generally of European descent and born in the United States. Tenants in housekeeping rooms could expect to rent a one- or two-room suite and share a common kitchen and bathroom with the rest of the building's tenants. The advent of the automobile brought additional changes to the neighborhood. In 1913, the cross-country Lincoln Highway (U.S. Route 40 in California) was completed and included a route through Sacramento that ran down 15th Street and east along M Street. Subsequently, M Street developed into a major transportation route through the city. Garages replaced carriage and livery stables along the alleys, and several automobile-oriented businesses were established in the area. In 1925, the Hudson Essex automobile company built the Arnold Building at the corner of 18th and M streets to serve as a new company dealership. In 1940, M Street was officially renamed Capitol Avenue as part of a beautification project that sought to transform the city's widest street into the grand thoroughfare to the Capitol building that the city's nineteenth-century planners had originally intended.

As automobile ownership increased, many of Sacramento's more affluent residents relocated to newer residential suburbs outside of the central city. The demand for streetcar service declined as a result. In 1939, streetcar service on Line 4 down M Street ended and was replaced by a new bus route.

By the 1980s, however, younger generations of Sacramentans had returned to the East End, and the population began to grow for the first time in 30 years. Capitol Avenue emerged as a popular location for restaurants and small commercial businesses. In 2006, the Arnold Building was rehabilitated for use as a restaurant. Its success attracted the development of additional dining and food-related establishments on the immediately surrounding properties. In the first decades of the twenty-first century, the blocks adjacent and to the south of Capitol Avenue have presented a vibrant mixture of historic, turn-of-the-century houses that stand side-by-side with restaurants, breweries, and neighborhood stores.

Period of Significance: 1874-1939

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the East End Historic District begins with the expansion of the State Capitol grounds in 1872 to create Capitol Park, an act that created a new public park that attracted residents to the area, and concludes with the end of streetcar service on M Street in 1939.

Architectural Styles: National, Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Shingle, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, French Eclectic, Beaux Arts, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Revival, Monterey, Classic Box, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular, Landscape, Commercial Styles: One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Predominately single-family residences, some of which have been converted into multi-family units, mixed with small apartment and commercial buildings • Parking and auxiliary uses located along the alleys • Commercial buildings concentrated on Capitol Avenue and at street intersections • Commercial uses located on publicly-accessible first stories with some commercial or residential use on upper stories
Mass & Form	• Some diversity of building height and massing, but most buildings are typically one- to three-stories tall • Delta-style high basement buildings with raised first story • Varying parcel widths, resulting in some variety of building widths • Larger, more elaborate buildings often located on street corners
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically narrow or wide-width channel rustic siding, two- or three-lap siding, or shingles, often of varying shapes and patterns on gabled ends • Brick or clinker brick foundations, column bases, and chimneys
Roofs	• Predominately prominent hipped or front-facing gabled roofs, often with dormers; some cross-gabled • Some with balconies, roof decks, or turrets • Commercial buildings with square or stepped parapets • Brick chimneys
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircases leading to primary entrances above a high basement • Paneled wood doors, often with a transom above, or integrated glazing • Commercial buildings typically have corner entrances when located at street intersections • Wood or terrazzo steps
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows, some grouped • Front- and side-facing bay windows; some box bays • Some stained-glass windows, especially on transoms over primary entrances
Porches	• Prominent full- or half-width porches

Ornamentation	• Mixture of details and ornamentation reflect the variety of architectural styles in the district • Moldings along porch eaves • Italianate and Queen Anne details, including incised brackets under roof eaves; slender, and turned porch posts and balusters • Classical Revival details, including fluted square columns and pilasters, modified Ionic columns, and dentils along cornice • Craftsman details, including exposed rafter and purlin tails, wood braces, and/or tapered square columns
Property Landscape	• Many lots with small front yards • Low fences in front of many houses, mostly wood picket or wrought iron with brick piers
Streetscape	• Varying setback of ten-20 feet from sidewalk to primary street-facing building façade, allowing for green space in front of buildings; further variation between those with stairs extending to the sidewalk and others that are setback further • Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees—most often elm, sycamore, palm, and walnut trees—planted in a parking strip • Some surviving granite street curbs • Evidence of removed hitching posts in the form of L-shaped concrete strips next to the street curb • General lack of driveways on east-west streets, but slightly more frequent on north-south streets

FREMONT PARK HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Fremont Park Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Fremont Park Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 10.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 10.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development that is a one-block assemblage of large late nineteenth and early twentieth-century houses facing Fremont Park from the south. The predominate architectural style of the district is Queen Anne. The buildings share a similar massing, raised entrances, and prominent front-facing gables that unify them as a group. In addition, the district features a Craftsman-style apartment building on the corner of Q and 16th streets and a large Italianate residence that was moved to its present location at 1526 Q Street in 1901. The landscape also adds to the visual cohesion of the district. Each of the buildings on Q Street share a similar setback with grassy front lawns and planted parking strips. Across the street, a row of mature palms line the southern perimeter of Fremont Park. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 10.C and 19, the Fremont Park Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a one-block assemblage of large late nineteenth and early twentieth-century houses across from Fremont Park. The predominate architectural style of the district is Queen Anne , and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 10.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 10.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Fremont Park Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 10.B are located within the Fremont Park Historic District as shown in Exhibit 10.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

As shown in Exhibits 10.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Craftsman, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, and Prairie, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 10.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1880 and ends in 1925 and are associated with the settlement of Sacramento's Midtown and East End at the end of the nineteenth century.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 10.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 10.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 10.C).

Historic Context: The Fremont Park Historic District preserves a single block of predominately late Victorian-era homes situated on Q Street between 15th and 16th streets. The residences were constructed at the crossroads of two early streetcar routes, the P Street line and 15th Street extension of the K Street line. The district is consistent with the development of Midtown at the turn of the twentieth century as wealthy and middle-class residents began to move out of Sacramento's crowded West End. Despite the area's current mixed-use environs, this section of Q Street was historically a contiguous residential area of primarily single-family homes.

The core buildings of the Fremont Park Historic District were constructed over a 35-year period, between 1880 and 1915. For much of the second half of the nineteenth century, the area in question was situated at the southeastern edge of the city, bounded by largely undeveloped land to the east and the R Street railroad levee to the south. An 1870-perspective view of Sacramento depicts the sporadic pattern of residential development east of 15th Street. By 1895, the same sector was a dense residential neighborhood and the present buildings at 1500, 1504, 1508, 1512, and 1522 Q Street and 1714 16th Street had been erected.

The growth of Midtown and the East End (the stretch of land positioned east of the Capitol grounds) was spurred by the establishment of horse-drawn streetcar lines along K, 20th, and O streets during the 1870s. The completion of the P Street line in 1892 allowed for more efficient access to Fremont Park area. During the 1890s, the neighborhood's proximity to the plaza and the streetcar line was highlighted in newspaper real estate advertisements.

The first residents of Fremont Park were upper and middle-class individuals from diverse backgrounds. One of these individuals was Manuel I. Enos, an immigrant from the Azores who opened the Enos Grocery Store at 1500 Q Street in 1894. The store served as the commercial anchor of the surrounding neighborhood and as a convenient stop for streetcar passengers and travelers leaving town. The property remained in the Enos family until 1994.

Another appealing amenity of the neighborhood was John C. Fremont Park, named for well-known Western explorer John C. Fremont. The park, one of the original plazas donated to the city by John Sutter, Jr. in 1848, remained undeveloped prior to 1900. The area's new inhabitants compelled municipal officials to make improvements to the space. In 1913, local philanthropist Cornelia E. Fratt, who resided at 1511 P Street, gave $2,500 to the city to build a comfort station and band stand on the site.

Throughout the twentieth century, transportation continued to play an important role in shaping the physical context of the area. In 1907, the Western Pacific Railroad opened a new railroad line on the Q/R Alley (Quill Alley), half a block north of the Southern Pacific's tracks on R Street. Meanwhile, the increasing popularity of automobiles over streetcars resulted in significant changes to the blocks adjacent to the park, a transformation that accentuates the present-day boundaries of the district. Maps published by the Sanborn Map Company between 1915 and 1952 document the gradual replacement of residences along 15th and 16th streets with automobile repair shops and car garages, including several in establishments within the area that have since been demolished.

Many streets in Midtown were converted into high speed, one-way channels leading to newly-constructed transcontinental highways. The Lincoln Highway was routed in 1913 and cut through downtown Sacramento via 15th Street and later 16th Street. To this day, 15th and 16th streets remain Midtown's primary arteries between U.S. Route 40 and Interstate 80. Just as the streetcars prompted residents to move out of the West End during the late nineteenth century, the highways allowed the wealthy to move farther into the suburbs during the mid-nineteenth century. By the 1950s many of the large single-family residences within the district were converted into flats and apartments to accommodate residents displaced by redevelopment projects.

In the twenty-first century, the Fremont Park Historic District and the surrounding neighborhood incorporate a mix of uses. In the place of single-family homes and transportation-related businesses outside of the district, large apartment buildings have been constructed on the west, north, and east borders of the park; the railroad tracks on the Q/R Alley have been converted for use by the Sacramento Regional Transit light rail. Within the district, many of the buildings serve as multi-unit residences. The former Enos Grocery Store remains commercial in use and currently houses a coffee shop.

Period of Significance: 1880-1925

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Fremont Park Historic District begins with the construction of the earliest surviving house in the district in 1880 and ends with the construction of the last building in the district in 1925.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Craftsman, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, Prairie

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Historically single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units, interspersed with a few mixed-use residential and commercial buildings • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• A cohesive block of vertically-oriented buildings • Predominately two-story houses with Delta-style high basements and raised first story
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically three or four lap, channel rustic, or shingle siding
Roofs	• Prominent front-facing gabled roofs • Flat, cross-gabled, and hipped roofs in a variety of pitches
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircases leading to primary entrances above a high

Windows	• Wood-frame, double-hung windows • Front- and side-facing bay windows
Porches	• Prominent full- or half-width porches accessed by a staircase
Ornamentation	• Italianate and Queen Anne details, including incised brackets under roof eaves, rounded windows, and patterned shingles on gabled ends • Classical Revival details, including Ionic columns and dentils along cornice • Prairie details, including wide overhanging eaves, tapered square and paired square columns, horizontal massing, and brick chimneys and porches
Landscape	• Large fir and deciduous trees throughout Fremont Park and palms lining sections of the park perimeter
Streetscape	• Axial pathways intersecting at the fountain at the center of Fremont Park • 14 historic lights in Fremont Park • Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees—most often palms—planted in a parking strip • Evidence of removed hitching posts along Q Street in the form of L-shaped concrete strips next to street curb • Unobstructed views of Q Street and Fremont Park

MARSHALL PARK HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Marshall Park Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Marshall Park Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 11.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 11.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as part of a cohesive grouping of houses that were constructed as part of the development of the Marshall School neighborhood as a turn-of-the-century streetcar suburb. Although Marshall Park was one of the ten public squares that were platted out in Sacramento's 1848 street grid, the surrounding area remained sparsely populated until the late nineteenth century, when streetcars began running to the area down J, H, and 28th streets. Like many streetcar suburbs across the country, the presence of public amenities, such as the Marshall Park and Marshall School, also attracted new residents to the area. The concentration of single-family houses in the area reflect the area's development as a primarily middleclass neighborhood. The buildings exhibit a similar age, scale, and use of materials and display the range of architectural styles characteristic of the Marshall School neighborhood's peak period of development from the late nineteenth to early twentieth century. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 11.C and 19, the Marshall Park Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a cohesive grouping of houses that exhibit a similar age, scale, and use of materials and display the range of architectural styles characteristic of the Marshall School neighborhood's peak period of development from the late nineteenth to early twentieth century, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may begreater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 11.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 11.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Marshall Park Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 11.B are located within the Marshall Park Historic District as shown in Exhibit 11.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 11.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Classical Revival, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Italian Renaissance, Mediterranean Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Vernacular, and Landscape, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 11.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1887 and ends in 1936 and is comprised of a cohesive grouping of houses that were constructed as part of the development of the Marshall School neighborhood as a turn-of-the-century streetcar suburb.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 11.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 11.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 11.C).

Exhibit 11.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The Marshall Park Historic District preserves a small but cohesive grouping of houses that were constructed around Marshall Park in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The 2.5- acre park is named after James Marshall, whose discovery of gold at John Sutter's sawmill in Coloma kicked off the California Gold Rush in 1848. The park—located on the block bounded by I, J, 27th, and 28th streets— is one of ten one-block plazas that John A. Sutter, Jr. donated to Sacramento for use as a public park when the young city was first laid out that same year. Located at the city's eastern periphery at the time of its establishment, the area around Marshall Park remained sparsely populated until the late nineteenth century when Sacramento's expanding population began to spill out into new streetcar suburbs that were emerging on the city's borders.

The development of new neighborhoods to the east of Sacramento's central business district was aided by the extension of streetcar lines to these areas, which allowed residents to enjoy the benefits of living outside the increasingly overcrowded and dirty city center while offering them the means to travel to their places of work downtown. These new "streetcar suburbs" followed a wider national trend as the expansion of streetcar service spurred the outward growth of cities across the country. By the start of the twentieth century, streetcars served the blocks surrounding Marshall Park on lines that ran down J and 28th streets. The Central Street Railway established a horse-drawn streetcar line that ran on these as part of its route from the Central Pacific Depot on 2nd and H streets to Oak Park in 1887. Electric streetcar service began in 1891. A resident explained the value of electric streetcars operating on J and 28th streets in a letter to the Sacramento Daily Union prior to the start of service: "Your home is convenient and made of greater value by the street cars being within a block of you," he wrote, "but it is enhanced in value much more by the cars going past your door."

By 1895, Sanborn fire insurance maps show that development had begun on the blocks around Marshall Park. The one-story Marshall Primary School, built in 1878, occupied the southern half of the park, and three single-family houses with alley-facing outbuildings had been constructed on the block immediately to its east. In 1900, the city decided to return the land on which the school sat to its originally intended role as a public plaza, and the Marshall School relocated two blocks north to a new site at 28th and G streets. The new building, completed in 1903, continued to serve the families in the area, which became known as the Marshall School neighborhood.

The neighborhood developed quickly at the start of the twentieth century. By 1915, all of the parcels surrounding Marshall Park were filled with single-family dwellings. These wood-framed houses were constructed in a similar scale to one another, with 40- foot frontages and a generally uniform setback from the street. A few apartment buildings also dotted the neighborhood.
Over the subsequent decades, the advent of the automobile transformed the blocks around Marshall Park. Streetcars running on multiple lines and an increasing number of automobiles whizzed down J Street, which had become part of the state's growing highway system by 1923. An additional streetcar line had also been established nearby on H Street.

The increasing popularity of the automobile led to the gradual end of streetcar service to Marshall Park and throughout much of Sacramento in the 1930s and 1940s. Service down 28th Street was replaced by an extension of the T Street bus line in 1936. The H Street streetcar line was gone by 1943. By the end of 1946, all streetcar service on J Street, one of the Sacramento's earliest and longest-running streetcar routes, had also ended.

By the middle of the century, the formerly quiet neighborhood of single-family homes had transitioned into a densely-populated, mixed-use area. Nearly all of the turn-of-the-twentieth-century houses on the blocks next to the park were adapted into multi-family flats or apartments. Automobile garages replaced outbuildings on the alleys, and apartment complexes and commercial businesses, including a rug cleaning establishment and paint shop, were built in the place of earlier houses.

Mid-century city redevelopment projects also impacted the area. In 1961, the Sacramento Senior Citizens Center opened in the center of Marshall Park. The building remains in use as the Ethel MacLeod Hart Senior Center. In 1968, the Interstate 80 highway was completed one block east of the park, creating a boundary between the original city and newer neighborhoods to the east around which large-scale commercial development proliferated.

Marshall Park in the early decades of the twenty-first century includes the Hart Senior Center, a children's play area, horseshoe pit, and adult fitness stations. The surrounding blocks are characterized by some surviving turn-of-the-twentieth-century houses, which are bordered by more recent development, including restaurants, retail shops, infill housing, and professional offices.

Period of Significance: 1887-1936

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Marshall Park Historic District begins with the start of streetcar service along J and 28th streets in 1887, which attracted new residential development to the area, and concludes with the end of streetcar service on 28th Street in 1936, which signaled the start of an exodus of many residents to newer automobile-oriented suburbs outside the city.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Classical Revival, Colonial Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Italian Renaissance, Mediterranean Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Vernacular, Landscape

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Historically single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units or commercial businesses • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys

Mass & Form	• Predominately two- to three-story single-family houses with Delta-style raised basements and raised first story • Smaller number of three-story apartment buildings
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically wide and narrow width channel rustic siding, three- or four-lap siding, or shingles; occasional use of brick, stucco, or a combination of these materials
Roofs	• Predominately front-facing gabled or hipped roofs, often with a centrally placed dormer • Brick or clinker brick chimneys
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircase leading to primary entrance above a high basement • Paneled wood doors, often with a transom above, side lites, or integrated glazing • Wood or terrazzo stairs
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung, casement, paired, ribbon, and leaded glass windows • Single and multi-story bay windows in semi-hexagonal, squared, and
Porches	• Prominent full or half-width porches accessed by a staircase • Brick or clinker brick porch or column bases
Ornamentation	• Italianate, Queen Anne, and Eastlake details, including incised brackets under roof eaves; slender, turned porch posts and balusters and patterned shingles on gabled ends • Classical Revival details, including Tuscan or modified Ionic columns and dentils along cornices • Craftsman and Prairie details such as wide, overhanging eaves, exposed rafter and purlin tails, wood braces, tapered square columns, and low shed dormers
Property Landscape	• Sloping lawns, particularly in front of houses on I Street between 26th and 27th streets; many with low brick walls and cement stairs • Rows of mature, evenly spaced palms planted around the • perimeter of Marshall Park
Streetscape	• Generally uniform setback of approximately 20-25 feet from the sidewalk to primary, street-facing building facades with 8-foot-wide wide parking strips and sidewalks • Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees— most often sycamore, elm, and palm trees—planted in a parking strip along the street curb • Evidence of removed hitching posts in the form of L-shaped concrete strips next to street curbs, especially on J Street between 26th and 27th streets

MERCHANT STREET HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Merchant Street Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Merchant Street Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 12.A (District boundaries). (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 12.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as part of Sacramento's main commercial district on J and K streets. All of the surviving buildings in the district were built for commercial uses and constructed with fire-resistant materials that reflect their location within the city's fire limits. Buildings that were constructed in the nineteenth century are characteristic of commercial construction of the period with public shopfronts on the first story and evidence of residences for business owners on the upper stories. Later-period construction reflects 7th Street's identity as the city's banking center, starting in the first decade of the twentieth century. A number of monumental banking halls that were designed by prominent early twentieth-century architects are located along the street from K to J streets. These buildings are unified by their similar use, age, monumental scale, marble and granite exteriors, and incorporation of Classical design details. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 12.C and 19, the Merchant Street Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as part of Sacramento's main commercial district on J and K streets. All of the surviving buildings in the district were built during the 19th and 20th century period, for commercial uses and constructed with fire-resistant materials that reflect their location within the city's fire limits. Even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code, § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 12.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 12.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Merchant Street Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 12.B are located within the Merchant Street Historic District as shown in Exhibit 12.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 12.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Neoclassical, Beaux Arts, Italian Renaissance, Art Deco, Vernacular, and Commercial Styles: (Two-Part Commercial Block, Enframed Window Wall, Three-Part Vertical Block, Temple Front, and Vault), all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 12.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1868 and ends in 1948 and relate to the city's development from a burgeoning Gold Rush town into a modern twentieth-century city, as reflected by the emergence of J and K streets as Sacramento's primary commercial corridors.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 12.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code, § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 12.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 12.C).

Exhibit 12.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The Merchant Street Historic District preserves a portion of Sacramento's central business district, which centered around J and K streets as early as the 1840s. The district is named for Merchant Street, the narrow alley between J, K, 7th, and 8th streets around which many of Sacramento's most prominent commercial and civic buildings were constructed in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Most notably, the stretch of 7th Street between J and K streets became an epicenter for banking, where monumental banking halls lined the street.

J and K streets were the principal threads along which Sacramento developed as its population grew after the outbreak of the California Gold Rush in 1848, the same year the city's grid was laid out. K Street sat at the foot of the levee where passengers disembarked from riverboats on the Sacramento River and became the center of California's stagecoach network, while J Street was the primary route to the gold fields to the east. Discerning entrepreneurs set up businesses along these routes, recognizing the profit they could make selling goods to gold seekers who were heading east in droves.

In 1852, a fire destroyed almost all of the city of Sacramento, most of which had been constructed of wood and canvas. The fire engulfed J Street as far as 9th Street and K Street to 12th Street. As part of the city's efforts to prevent future fires from destroying its downtown, blocks within the central business district were zoned within the city's "fire limits," an area in which buildings were required be constructed of fire-resistant materials, such as brick or stone. Because of the high cost of building with such materials, commercial and civic development dominated blocks within the city's fire limits.

The corner of K and 7th streets was also a hotbed of cultural activity. The new brick building of the St. Rose of Lima Church was completed on a half-acre of land at the intersection's northeast corner in 1861. As the city's only Catholic church until 1887, it became the heart of Sacramento's Irish community and is the namesake for the public plaza that is located on the site today.

Disaster struck Sacramento again in the winter of 1861-1862 when devastating floods left much of the city underwater for three months. In response, the city undertook a number of major projects to protect itself from future floods. From 1863 to 1868, Sacramento's streets were raised by as much as 14 feet. Seventh Street between J and K streets and K Street from 4th to 10th streets were raised to the new high level in 1868. Portions of the hollow sidewalks that were built as part of this process survive, and many are accessible from the basements of existing buildings.

The construction of Pioneer Hall at 1011 7th Street coincided with the raising of the city's streets in 1868. The building was designed by Nathaniel Goodell, architect of the Governor's Mansion, to be the headquarters of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers. The society, now the Sacramento Pioneer Association, has owned the building since its construction, making it the oldest continuously owned building in Sacramento. As membership rose and fell over subsequent decades, Pioneer Hall was leased out and used as a cigar store, shoe shop, barber shop, dance studio, saloon, bar, and the offices of the Sacramento Housing and Redevelopment Agency. The building was renovated in 1987 and continues to be owned by the Sacramento Pioneer Association.

Sacramento's improved stability after the flood control improvements of the 1860s and 1870s and the introduction of new transportation options encouraged new commercial development in the city's central business district. Electric streetcar lines began operation on J and K streets in 1891 and were joined soon after by interurban railroads. The Northern Electric interurban railroad depot was located 8th and J streets, and the depot of the Central California Traction, another interurban railroad, opened half a block south in 1909. The interurban railroads offered passenger service from outlying towns and rural areas and brought increasing numbers of people to Sacramento's burgeoning commercial corridor around J and K streets.

By 1895, the blocks around these streets were filled with narrow, two-story commercial buildings with saloons, restaurants, drug stores, and other small commercial businesses located on the first story and lodgings for shop owners on the second story. A well-preserved example of the commercial development of the period is the Ochsner Building, located directly east of St. Rose of Lima Plaza. The first three stories were designed by architect Rudolph Herold and completed in 1904; an additional two stories were added in 1922.

Large-scale civic construction also took place at the turn of the century. In 1891, St. Rose of Lima Church was demolished, and in 1894, a new Richardsonian Romanesque post office building with a red sandstone exterior opened on the site. The building was expanded from 1910 to 1912, by which time it included a seven-story meteorological observation tower and was also in use as a federal office building.

Seventh Street, meanwhile, developed into Sacramento's banking center with grand banking halls designed by prominent local architects lining the street. A Neoclassical banking hall designed by Willis Polk for the National Bank of D.O. Mills and Company opened on the northwest corner of J and 7th streets in 1912. Three years later, the Capital National Bank Building, designed by Rudolph Herold, was completed on the corner diagonally across from it. The Classical Revival-style Merchant's National Bank building, by architect H.H. Winner, was completed in 1921 at 1015 7th Street.

The peak period of development around 7th, J, and K streets coincided with the popularity of streetcar service in Sacramento, which peaked in the 1920s. Built up during the era of pedestrian and streetcar travel, the blocks were ill-suited for the transition to automobile traffic as almost none of the businesses had parking lots or parking garages. As automobile ownership accelerated after World War II and commercial businesses began to relocate to new suburbs outside the city center, the demand for public transportation declined. Regular passenger service on the Northern Electric interurban railroad and riverboat service to San Francisco ended in 1940. By 1947, all streetcar service in the city had also ceased.

In 1948, the sandstone of the post office at the corner of K and 7th streets had eroded to the point that the building had become a safety hazard, and the tower and some of the exterior ornamentation were selectively removed. The building continued to deteriorate and was demolished in 1967. The cleared site was converted into a public plaza and renamed St. Rose of Lima Plaza.

Redevelopment projects in the 1960s altered the landscape surrounding the 700 blocks of J and K streets. In 1967, construction began on the Downtown Plaza shopping mall that stretched down K Street from 4th to 7th streets. Two years later, K Street from 7th to 13th streets was redeveloped into a pedestrian mall. Meanwhile, the completion of Interstate 5, Interstate 80, and Highway 50 through the city diverted traffic away from the historic central business district and pulled commercial traffic to new shopping centers in outlying suburban developments.

The twenty-first century has brought reinvigorated commercial development to the blocks around J, K, and 7th streets. In 2016, the Golden One Center sports and entertainment facility and Downtown Commons development replaced much of the Downtown Plaza mall that borders the historic district west of 7th Street. The D.O. Mills Bank building has been adaptively reused as a restaurant, and the row of nineteenth-and early twentieth-century commercial buildings on the south side of the 700 block of K Street have been incorporated into The Hardin housing and commercial development project.

Period of Significance: 1868-1948

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Merchant Street Historic District begins in 1868, when efforts to raise the street levels to protect the city from floods introduced stability that encouraged new development on J and K streets, and ends in 1948, when demolition of the U.S. Post Office building on K and 7th streets began and the commercial building at 726 K Street was remodeled into its current configuration.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Neoclassical, Beaux Arts, Italian Renaissance, Art Deco, Vernacular, Commercial Styles: (Two-Part Commercial Block, Enframed Window Wall, Three-Part Vertical Block, Temple Front, Vault)

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Commercial uses located on publicly-accessible first stories with some commercial or residential use on upper stories
Mass & Form	• Predominately two- or three-story commercial buildings • One five-story building and one seven-story building • Two- or Three-Part Commercial Block style buildings typically vertically massed • Classically-styled buildings typically horizontally massed
Cladding	• Predominately brick, stone, or other fire-proof materials
Roofs	• Flat roofs, many with simple, square parapets

Entries & Doors	• Entrances face principal street and are commonly recessed and centrally located; although some are situated at corners or placed to one side • Wood or metal doors with integrated glazing
Windows	• Picture, double-hung, or casement windows with steel or wood-frames
Ornamentation	• Neoclassical details, such as Greek or Doric columns, pilasters, roofline balustrades, dentil or bracket courses along cornice, Classical statuary, floral garlands, flat roofs, and arched windows • Italianate and Queen Anne style details, such as turrets, cutaway bay windows, hood molded windows, and overhanging eaves supported by brackets
Property Landscape	• Minimal or no property landscaping
Streetscape	• Rows of medium-sized sycamore trees planted along 7th Street and K Street • Extant hollow sidewalks and sunken alleyways dating to the street raising campaigns of the 1860s

NEW WASHINGTON SCHOOL HISTORIC DISTRICT (FORMALLY WASHINGTON SCHOOL HISTORIC DISTRICT)

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the New Washington School Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The New Washington School Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 13.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 13.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as part of a collection of late nineteenth and early twentieth-century houses that were built as part of a middle-class neighborhood that emerged directly to the east of Sacramento's older residential neighborhoods as streetcar lines expanded outward from the city center. The architectural styles present in the district range from Victorian-era Italianate and Queen Anne style houses to 1930s Minimal Traditional cottages, and reflects the area's peak period of development prior to the departure of the streetcars in 1936 and the exodus of residents to newer automobile-oriented suburbs further from the city center. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 13.C and 19, the New Washington School Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a collection of late nineteenth and early twentieth-century houses that were built as part of a middle-class neighborhood that emerged directly to the east of Sacramento's older residential neighborhoods as streetcar lines expanded outward from the city center. The range of architectural styles present in the district, ranging from Victorian-era Italianate and Queen Anne style houses to 1930s Minimal Traditional cottages, reflects the area's peak period of development prior to the departure of the streetcars in 1936 and the exodus of residents to newer automobile-oriented suburbs further from the city center. Even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Historic District Name.

The Washington School Historic District is hereby renamed the New Washington School Historic District.

SECTION 3. Contributing Resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 13.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 13.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the New Washington School Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 13.B are located within the New Washington School Historic District as shown in Exhibit 13.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 13.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Shingle, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Spanish Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular, and significant landscape features, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 13.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1870 and ends in 1936 and are associated with the development of new residential neighborhoods along the city's streetcar lines from the late nineteenth to early twentieth century.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 13.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 13.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 13.C).

Exhibit 13.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The New Washington School Historic District preserves one of Sacramento's oldest residential neighborhoods that developed along the city's first streetcar lines in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The neighborhood is named after the Washington Elementary School, which moved from its original location at 13th and G streets to the intersection of 18th and E streets in 1916.

Sacramento's first streetcar line began service in August 1870 under the ownership of the City Street Railway. The line consisted of horse-drawn cars that ran from the Central Pacific Railroad station on Sacramento's waterfront at Front and K streets and down H Street to the State Agricultural Society's California State Fairgrounds at 20th and G streets. Like the Mansion Flats neighborhood to the west (the Old Washington School Historic District), access to streetcar service attracted middle-class residents to the area, who relied on the streetcars to travel to their places of work downtown. As a result, the neighborhood was largely settled by employees of the Southern Pacific Railroad and the city's other industries, who built modestly-sized houses on the blocks north of H Street.

The expansion of streetcar service corresponded to the neighborhood's growth in the late nineteenth century. The H Street line was discontinued in 1892; the following year, it was replaced by a new line of electric streetcars operated by the Central Electric Railroad Company, which ran along G Street from 7th to 19th streets. The line was considered "a great convenience to people residing in the northern and northeastern portions of the city, who had been without a railway ever since the H-street line was discontinued," and was believed to "greatly enhance the value of property in that portion of the city."

The arrival of the Western Pacific Railroad in Sacramento also had an impact on the neighborhood's physical development in the early twentieth century. In 1907, the railroad company received the right to build a second set of transcontinental railroad tracks through the city by purchasing an 80-foot right-of-way from property owners between 19th and 20th streets. The plan was met with resistance from residents who believed that the route would destroy "the very best residence district" in the city. The Western Pacific proposed mitigating the effects of a rail line running through the center of the city by landscaping the right-of-way into a parkway and building elevated pedestrian crossings, but the landscaping proposals were never realized. Freight service began on the new rail line in 1909, and passenger service followed a year later.

In 1916, Washington Elementary School relocated from the corner of 13th and G streets to the block bounded by E, F, 17th, and 18th streets, giving its name to the surrounding neighborhood. A new Mission Revival style building was completed on the site shortly after. The school's relocation was an indication of the area's growing population and the need to provide public services to the local community.

By the 1920s, major transportation corridors had developed that roughly correspond to the present-day historic district's boundaries. In 1923, streetcar lines ran down G Street to 19th Street and along D Street between 15th and 19th streets, then north along 19th Street to C Street. Sixteenth Street, which formed the neighborhood's western boundary, and a portion of D Street had also been incorporated into the state highway system by this period. The Western Pacific rail tracks marked the neighborhood's eastern boundary.

Residents continued to consist primarily of middle-class workers, such as clerks, printers, stenographers, electricians, and carpenters, who lived in modest single-family houses or multi-unit flats.

Residential development slowed during the Great Depression. The economic downswing, combined with the rising popularity of the automobile, led to the decline of streetcar lines across the city. In 1936, streetcar service along G Street ended and was replaced by bus service. After World War II, many residents migrated out of the city's central grid to newer residential suburbs outside the city limits and were replaced by lower-income residents. Multi-unit apartment buildings were constructed in greater numbers over the following decades in response to the demographic shift.

In 1975, Washington Elementary School building was demolished; the following year, it was replaced by a new building at the same location. In 2013, the City closed the school in an effort to save money in the face of budget cuts after years of declining enrollment. Local residents responded to the decision with grassroots opposition efforts and lawsuits, and, in 2016, the school reopened with a new STEAM (science, technology, engineering, arts, and math) curriculum. City leaders viewed the school's reopening as "a vital step" in its efforts to attract families back into the central city.

Period of Significance: 1870-1936

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the New Washington School Historic District begins with the start of streetcar service to the area in 1870, which attracted residential development to the area, and concludes in 1936, when streetcar service ended along G Street.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Stick/Eastlake, Queen Anne, Shingle, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Spanish Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular, Landscape

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Historically single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units, interspersed with a few multi-unit apartments and commercial businesses • Parking, infill development, and auxiliary uses located along alleys

Mass & Form	• Typically, one-to-two stories tall over a raised basement • Some larger, three-story multi-unit apartment buildings • Predominately houses with Delta-style high basement and raised first story • Largest, most elaborate houses situated on corner lots
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically wide and narrow width channel rustic siding, three- or four-lap siding, or shingles, especially on upper stories and
Roofs	• Front-facing gabled, hipped, or jerkinhead roofs, often with a low, centrally placed dormer • Brick or clinker brick chimneys
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircases leading to primary entrances above a high basement • Paneled wood doors, often with a transom above, or integrated glazing • Wood, terrazzo, or brick stairs
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows • Bay windows, both front- and side-facing • Stained glass and spiderweb windows as occasional decorative accent
Porches	• Prominent full or half-width porches accessed by a staircase • Brick or clinker brick chimneys, foundations, and column bases
Ornamentation	• Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake details, including incised brackets; spindlework; turned columns; patterned shingles at gabled ends; and rounded windows • Classical Revival details, including Tuscan columns • Craftsman details, including exposed rafter and purlin tails, wood braces, tapered square columns, and low shed dormers
Property Landscape	• Gardens, lawns, or patios in front of houses • Low fences in front of many houses, mostly wood picket or wrought iron and some with brick piers • Some brick paved front patios • Few surviving iron letterboxes
Streetscape	• Varying setbacks ranging from 25 feet or less in front of apartment buildings to 40 feet in front of some older Italianate houses; in general setbacks are smaller on numbered streets (approximately 30 feet) and larger on lettered streets (more than 30 feet) • Rows of deciduous street trees of varying types and sizes— most often sycamore, elm, and palm trees—planted in a parking strip along the street curb; some blocks with surviving, cohesive rows of mature elm or sycamore trees • Some brick-paved parking strips • Horse-head hitching posts and evidence of removed hitching posts in the form of L-shaped cement strips next to the street curb, especially on F and G streets

OLD WASHINGTON SCHOOL HISTORIC DISTRICT (FORMALLY WASHINGTON HISTORIC DISTRICT)

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Old Washington School Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Old Washington School Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 14.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 14.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as part of a collection of late nineteenth and early twentieth-century houses that were built directly to the east of Sacramento's older residential neighborhoods to the west as streetcar lines expanded outward from the city center. The Old Washington School neighborhood, alternately known as Mansion Flats, grew alongside Sacramento's first streetcar line, which began operation in 1870 and initially ran down H Street before shifting to G Street in 1893. Easy access to transportation attracted both wealthy business owners and middle-class employees to build houses close to the streetcar line. While more affluent residents built the mansions along H Street that gave the neighborhood its nickname, the blocks to the north that comprise the Old Washington School Historic District were filled with the smaller houses of employees of the city's railyards and other industries. The existing buildings in the area reflect the range of architectural styles that were popular for new residential development during this peak period of development in the neighborhoods. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 14.C and 19, the Old Washington School Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a collection of late nineteenth and early twentieth-century houses that were built directly to the east of Sacramento's older residential neighborhoods to the west as streetcar lines expanded outward from the city center. The existing buildings in the area reflect the range of architectural styles that were popular for new residential development during this peak period of development in the neighborhoods, and even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may begreater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibits 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Historic District Name.

The Washington Historic District is hereby renamed the Old Washington School Historic District.

SECTION 3. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 14.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 14.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Old Washington School Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 14.B are located within the Old Washington School Historic District as shown in Exhibit 14.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 14.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1870 and ends in 1936 and are late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century houses that were built as part of a middle-class neighborhood that emerged directly to the east of Sacramento's older residential neighborhoods as streetcar lines expanded outward from the city center.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 14.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 14.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 14.C).

Exhibit 14.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The Old Washington School Historic District preserves a portion of the Washington neighborhood, one of Sacramento's oldest residential neighborhoods that developed along the city's first streetcar lines in the 1870s. The neighborhood is named after the Washington Elementary School, which moved from its original location at 13th and G streets to the intersection of 18th and E streets, now a part of the New Washington School Historic District, in 1916.

Sacramento's first streetcar line began service in 1870 under the ownership of the City Street Railway. The line consisted of horse-drawn cars that ran from the Central Pacific Railroad station on Sacramento's waterfront at Front and K streets down H Street to the State Agricultural Society's California State Fairgrounds at 20th and G streets. Streetcar service attracted prominent local business owners to settle along H Street, including brewery owner Frank Ruhstaller and longtime Huntington-Hopkins Hardware manager Albert Gallatin. H Street became known as "Merchants' Row" as a result. The concentration of stately homes in the area, meanwhile, gave the surrounding neighborhood another name: Mansion Flats.

The name "Mansion Flats," however, belies the reality that the neighborhood was a predominately middle-class residential area. Employees of the Southern Pacific Railroad and the city's other industries lived in smaller houses on the blocks to the north of G Street that make up the present-day Old Washington School Historic District. Unlike the wealthy elites living along H Street, many of whom owned their own private carriages, the streetcar line provided a vital service to the workers who lived in the neighborhood and used it to travel to their places of work downtown.

As the neighborhood grew in the late nineteenth century, streetcar service continued to expand. The H Street line was discontinued in 1892; the following year, it was replaced by a new line of electric streetcars operated by the Central Electric Railroad Company, which ran along G Street from 7th to 19th streets. The line was considered "a great convenience to people residing in the northern and northeastern portions of the city, who had been without a railway ever since the H Street line was discontinued," and was believed to "greatly enhance the value of property in that portion of the city."

By 1923, the Washington neighborhood—named after the relocation of the Washington Elementary School in 1916—was bordered by several major transportation corridors. Streetcar lines ran down G Street and 15th Street, which was also part of the state highway system along with the neighborhood's western boundary at 12th Street. Residents continued to consist primarily of middle-class workers, such as clerks, printers, stenographers, lens grinders, electricians, and carpenters.

Residential development slowed during the Great Depression. The economic downswing, combined with the rising popularity of the automobile, led to the decline of streetcar lines across the city. In 1936, streetcar service along G Street ended and was replaced by bus service. After World War II, many residents migrated out of the city's central grid to newer residential suburbs outside the city limits and were replaced by lower-income residents. Multi-unit apartment buildings were constructed in greater numbers over the following decades in response to the demographic shift. More recently, infill projects have brought new residential development to the Washington neighborhood at the start of the twenty-first century. In 2008, loft apartments were constructed on C Street using "green" building technology.

Period of Significance: 1870-1936

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Old Washington School Historic District begins with the start of streetcar service to the area in 1870, which attracted residential development to the area, and concludes in 1936, when streetcar service ended along G Street.

Architectural Styles: Gothic Revival, Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Classical Revival, Beaux Arts, Spanish Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Classic Box, Prairie, Craftsman, Vernacular

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Historically single-family houses, some of which have been converted into multi-unit apartments or commercial businesses • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• Predominately one- or two-story houses with Delta- style high basements and raised first story • Some larger, three-story multi-unit apartment buildings • Houses with almost identical design often located on the same block, possibly built by the same person • Concentration of large houses in the southern section of the district, particularly on F Street and the immediately surrounding blocks • Smaller houses on blocks near industrial development along the district's northern boundary
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically wide and narrow width channel rustic siding, three- or four-lap siding, or shingles of varying shapes, especially on gabled ends
Roofs	• Front-facing gabled or hipped roofs, often with a low, centrally placed dormer • Brick chimneys
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircases leading to primary entrances above a high basement • Paneled wood doors with integrated glazing or framed by side or transom windows • Wood stairs
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows • Bay windows, both front- and side-facing

Porches	• Prominent full or half-width porches accessed by a staircase
Ornamentation	• Italianate, Queen Anne, and Stick/Eastlake details, including incised brackets; spindlework; slender, turned porch posts and balusters; and patterned shingles on gabled ends • Classical Revival details, including fluted, square pilasters, Tuscan columns, and decorative garlands
Property Landscape	• Gardens, lawns, or patios in front of houses • Low fences in front of many houses, mostly wood picket or wrought iron, often with brick piers
Streetscape	• Generally uniform setback of approximately 30 feet from the street to building facades on lettered streets, often with wide parking strips and sidewalks, both of approximately eight feet in width • Rows of deciduous street trees of varying types and sizes—most often sycamore, elm, and palm trees— planted in a parking strip along the street curb • Wide streets with two full-size traffic lanes

PLAZA PARK (CESAR CHAVEZ PLAZA) HISTORIC DISTRICT (FORMALLY PLAZA PARK/CENTRAL BUSINESS DISTRICT HISTORIC DISTRICT)

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 15.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

   As explained in Exhibit 15.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development with a concentration of buildings that reflect over a century of civic and commercial development in Sacramento's central business district. The diversity of buildings and uses within the district also reflect changing tastes in commercial and civic architectural styles over time. Early twentieth-century civic and institutional buildings, including City Hall and the Sacramento City Library, are characteristic examples of the Beaux Arts and Italian Renaissance styles, respectively. Conversely, the design of the Federal Courthouse and Post Office, which was constructed at the low point of the Great Depression, is representative of federally funded WPA buildings of the period. The district's many commercial buildings, meanwhile, range from small nineteenth-century brick commercial buildings to the larger department stores of major national brands that remained a vibrant part of the city through the middle of the twentieth century. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

   As shown in Exhibits 15.C and 19, the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association with a concentration of buildings that reflect over a century of civic and commercial development in Sacramento's central business district. The diversity of buildings and uses within the district also reflect changing tastes in commercial and civic architectural styles over time. Early twentieth-century civic and institutional buildings, including City Hall and the Sacramento City Library, are characteristic examples of the Beaux Arts and Italian Renaissance styles, respectively. Conversely, the design of the Federal Courthouse and Post Office, which was constructed at the low point of the Great Depression, is representative of federally funded WPA buildings of the period. The district's many commercial buildings, meanwhile, range from small nineteenth-century brick commercial buildings to the larger department stores of major national brands that remained a vibrant part of the city through the middle of the twentieth century. Even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Historic District Name.

The Plaza Park/Central Business District Historic District is hereby renamed the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District.

SECTION 3. Contributing Resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 15.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 15.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 15.B are located within the Plaza Park (Cesar Chavez Plaza) Historic District as shown in Exhibit 15.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

As shown in Exhibits 15.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Queen Anne, Romanesque Revival Neoclassical, Italian Renaissance, Beaux Arts, Art Deco, Streamline Moderne, Late Moderne, and Commercial Styles (One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block, Three-Part Block, Two-Part Vertical Block, Central Block with Wings, and Vault), all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 15.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1848 and ends in 1951 and are significant for their association with Sacramento's evolution from burgeoning Gold Rush town to modern metropolitan city.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   As shown in Exhibits 15.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

   As shown in Exhibits 15.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 15.C).

Exhibit 15.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District has witnessed nearly 170 years of Sacramento's history and features an equally broad spectrum of architectural periods and styles. Sacramentans have referred to the plaza by a number of names over the course of its history, including its such early appellations as City Plaza, Plaza Park, or simply, "the Plaza," and its current name, Cesar Chavez Park. The one-block lot, was one of ten public squares donated to the City by John A. Sutter, Jr. in 1848 as part of the laying out of his father's rancho into Sacramento's original street grid. After Sacramento attained its status as the state capital in 1854, it was proposed that the plaza be used for the site of the Capitol building, a scheme that was later abandoned.

The square remained undeveloped open space for several decades, to the point that local newspapers described it as an "omnium gatherum of wagons and weeds." In 1872, Street Commissioner John Rider was "determined to fill-in the plaza and reclaim it from the circus, the strayed animal, the dump cart and the winter's waters." The square was filled an average of five feet with material taken from the bed of the American River. John Keating was hired to design the landscape of the park. Keating's axial plan is still visible in the plaza's present layout.

The improvement of the plaza was a major endeavor that coincided with the raising of street levels in downtown Sacramento. The devastating floods of 1861 and 1862 prompted the local government to improve the public infrastructure of the city. Not only was the street raising project undertaken in the interest of safeguarding Sacramento residents, but also as a measure to ensure that Sacramento remained a viable location for the State Capitol and an attractive destination for the terminus of the transcontinental railroad.

8th Street between I and K streets; and 9th and 10th streets between I and J streets. As a whole, the streets were raised to be level with the plaza, which was the highest land mass in the city. The resulting streetscape included hollow sidewalks, many of which are still intact within the area.

The plaza is surrounded on all sides by multi-story institutional and commercial buildings. While the majority of the area's core buildings date from the late-1890s through the 1930s, some date to the earlier commercial development of downtown Sacramento. The two-story brick building located at 904 J Street was constructed in 1856, making it the oldest extant structure in the district and one of the oldest in the city. During the mid-nineteenth century, J Street was the primary route for travelers passing through on their way to the gold fields in the foothills of the Sierras. Here, wagon trains were able to restock their provisions before exiting the city at 12th Street. The building at 904 J Street was occupied by a drug store under various names and proprietors from as early as its construction until the mid-twentieth century.

Throughout the remainder of the nineteenth century, the parcels adjacent to the plaza were characterized by a multitude of uses, such as that of the "Old Reliable" drug store at 904 J Street. A map of Sacramento published by the Sanborn Map Company in 1895 depicts a mix of single-family dwellings, stables, manufacturers, shops, junk yards, and hotels situated on the major commercial thoroughfares of I, J, K, and L streets. Some of the notable buildings that were constructed during this period include the Hale Brothers Department Store at 825 K Street, the I.O.O.F. Temple at 1025 9th Street, and the Ruhstaller Building at 900 J Street. The Ruhstaller Building was constructed in 1898 for Frank J. Ruhstaller and housed a taproom for the Buffalo Brewing Company, Elks Hall, doctors' offices, and commercial businesses.

The first decades of the twentieth century ushered in a building boom unlike anything Sacramento had witnessed since the Gold Rush. The California- Western States Life Insurance Building, constructed in 1925 at the corner of the corner of J and 10th streets, remains a testament to this era of growth and prosperity. The classical motifs of the skyscraper compliment the Beaux Arts and Renaissance Revival municipal buildings that were also built during this period. Because of its proximity to the State Capitol grounds, the area was increasingly civic-oriented after the turn of the twentieth century. The ornate City Hall and Sacramento City Library, both located at the northern terminus of the district, were constructed in 1911 and 1918, respectively.

The area felt the effects of the Great Depression but did not cease to be a center of activity in the city. The Federal Courthouse and Post Office Building, constructed in 1933, was one of many federally- funded projects that employed Sacramentans during the Depression. Likewise, the Hart Brothers Cafeteria, located at 1016-1020 10th Street, served thousands of meals per day to the area's large unemployed and transient populations. At the height of the Depression, the restaurant offered free coffee and bread every evening.

During World War II, defense-related industries brought thousands of new residents to Sacramento. The staggering population growth felt by the greater metro-area brought with it renewed commercial spending to downtown. The Baby Boom Generation flocked to department stores on J and K streets. Among the enterprises within the area were the Hale Brothers Department Store and S.H. Kress and Company. These businesses stood as pillars of the postwar city by catering to the "pent-up consumer demand" of the region's rapidly expanding middle class.

The district changed dramatically with the rise of Sacramento's suburbs. In 1954, the shops and major department stores on K Street accounted for 75.6 percent of the county's sales tax base. That figure had dropped to 19.6 percent by 1965. The long-standing establishments of the district opened suburban branches throughout the 1950s and 1960s, many of which were more profitable than their downtown locations. The first regional mall in the vicinity of Sacramento, the Country Club Center, was opened in 1951. The Country Club Center and other new malls offered a more convenient shopping experience for the rapidly expanding suburban population.

The decline in urban commercial activity during the mid-twentieth century was directly linked to the increased efficiency of automobile transportation. The transformation was slow, at first. In 1947, the city's extensive streetcar network was shut down in favor of buses and personal vehicles, a change that impacted the pedestrian character of downtown. In 1955, K and L streets were converted into one-way thoroughfares connecting the Tower Bridge to U.S. Route 40. The final setback to the once thriving central business district came in 1968 with the completion of the Interstates 5 and 80 through downtown Sacramento, diverting automobile traffic away from city streets, entirely, and on to outlying shopping malls and newer residential areas.

The plaza played an important role in the revitalization of the central business district towards the end of the twentieth century. In 1989, the Plaza Park Steering Committee worked with People for Public Places. Inc. to conduct an evaluation of the park. Their study led to the development of a popular restaurant in the park. In 1995, the Downtown Sacramento Partnership established the state's first property- based improvement district, which has brought countless community events and programs to the plaza over the years. In 1999, the plaza was renamed Cesar Chavez Plaza after the labor rights activist and founder of the United Farm Workers of America.

Period of Significance: 1848-1951

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District spans from 1848, when Sacramento's original street grid and public plazas were laid out, to 1951, when the Country Club Center was erected as Sacramento's first regional mall, drawing commercial activity away from downtown. The suburban mall, along with increased automobile and home ownership during the postwar period, forever changed the ways in which residents interacted with the central business district. Large shopping malls outside of Sacramento's downtown grid attracted mobile, middle-class individuals who were no longer dependent localized services and retail.

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Commercial and civic buildings of varying ages and styles oriented around 9th Street and Cesar Chavez Plaza • Changes in use and character between the north and south ends of the district—large civic buildings concentrated on I and 9th streets at the northern terminus of the district, modest One- and Two-Part Block commercial buildings on the south edge of the plaza, and large department stores located on K Street (i.e. Hale Brothers, Kress, and Montgomery & Ward)
Mass & Form	• Horizontally massed civic buildings and vertically massed commercial buildings • Tallest buildings frequently situated on corner parcels
Materials	• Predominately brick, stone, terracotta, and concrete masonry

Roofs	• Predominately flat roofs with protruding cornices and ornamented soffits • Commercial buildings with flat or geometric parapets, particularly those facing the south edge of the plaza
Entries & Doors	• Recessed entrances, particularly on One-Part Commercial Block buildings • Presence or evidence of garage doors for vehicular access on numbered streets and alleys
Windows	• Large shopfront windows at street level • Multi-story boxed, semi-hexagonal, and rounded bay windows • Wood-frame, double-hung windows on the upper stories of mixed-use buildings
Ornamentation	• Minimal wall surface ornamentation • Classical Revival details, such as egg-and-dart trim, dentil bands, medallions, and garlands • High density of Art Deco-style elements near the intersection of 9th and K streets • Columns and pilasters topped with Ionic or Corinthian capitals and Roman or segmental arches with prominent voussoirs and keystones • Ghost signs on the exposed sides of older brick buildings
Property Landscape	• Minimal or no property landscaping due to zero-lot-line buildings • Axial pathways intersecting at the Coleman Fountain at the center of Cesar Chavez Plaza
Streetscape	• Deep, south-facing setbacks in front of City Hall and the Federal Courthouse and Post Office building • Minimal or no setback in front of commercial buildings throughout the district • Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees—most often sycamore, palm, and walnut trees—planted in planters or small parking strips lining the sidewalks • Large gilded lampposts at the primary entrances of civic buildings • Extant hollow sidewalks and sunken alleyways dating to the street raising campaigns of the 1860s • Some cobblestones and granite curbs along street edges

POVERTY RIDGE HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the Poverty Ridge Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The Poverty Ridge Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 16.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 16.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as a concentration of large, single-family houses that were constructed as part of the development of the Poverty Ridge neighborhood, one of Sacramento's wealthiest and most prestigious residential neighborhoods in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The grandest houses in the neighborhood were built primarily between 1870 and 1915 on broad lots along 21st and 22nd streets. Many were designed by highly regarded local architects, who were hired to design houses that would reflect the homeowners' wealth and status. Corner lots often featured the largest and most impressive houses in the neighborhood. In the 1920s and 1930s, smaller houses and multi-family apartment buildings were constructed on lots around the neighborhood's borders, where pressure from industrial development was greater. This variation in housing scale and patterns remains apparent in the historic district today. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 16.C and 19, the Poverty Ridge Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association with a variety of architectural styles that are visible within the Poverty Ridge Historic District are representative of the styles that were most popular during the neighborhood's primary period of development from the late nineteenth century to the early decades of the twentieth century. The buildings range from elaborate Queen Anne and Italianate Victorians; to Beaux Arts, Classical Revival, and Prairie style houses; to smaller Craftsman style bungalows. The size, style, quality, and setting of the buildings reflect Poverty Ridge's past as one of Sacramento's wealthiest and most fashionable neighborhoods at the turn of the twentieth century, and even those buildings that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 16.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 16.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the Poverty Ridge Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 16.B are located within the Poverty Ridge Historic District as shown in Exhibit 16.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 16.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Shingle, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Tudor, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Revival, Monterey, Prairie, Craftsman, Classic Box, Art Deco, Minimal Traditional, and Vernacular, all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 16.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1868 and ends in 1947 and relate to the development of streetcar suburbs on previously rural, agricultural land of outlying areas within Sacramento's original street grid.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 16.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 16.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 16.C).

Exhibit 16.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-Defining Features

Historic Context: The Poverty Ridge Historic District preserves an area that was considered to be Sacramento's wealthiest neighborhood in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The neighborhood is located on a slight rise in the southeast quadrant of Sacramento's original 1848 city limits. Because it was one of the only elevated areas within the city, residents often fled to this area for safety during the floods that periodically devastated Sacramento in the nineteenth century. People camping out on the ridge looked so poor that locals nicknamed the area "Poverty Ridge."

Despite the area's advantageous location and its reputation as "the most beautiful eminence in the city," Poverty Ridge remained sparsely populated until the late nineteenth century. Burns Slough, which ran between 18th and 19th streets, often turned the blocks between the ridge and 14th Street into "an almost impassable quagmire," preventing potential residents from reaching the area. Beginning in 1868, the city carried out several projects to address the issue of flooding around Burns Slough, initially strengthening levees and later redirected through a system of underground sewers and drainage tunnels.

Residential development began in Poverty Ridge in the late nineteenth century. By then, increasing industrialization, the influx of low-income workers, and the expanding impact of the Southern Pacific Railroad on the environment and local politics had turned the city's downtown core into an overcrowded, polluted, dirty, and crime-ridden area. Seeking quieter, cleaner, and safer places to live, Sacramento's affluent middle- and upper-class residents began to migrate to new neighborhoods, such as Poverty Ridge, that were emerging on the city's undeveloped tracts to the south and east.

Poverty Ridge became the neighborhood of choice for Sacramento's wealthiest and most influential citizens. Residents included Buffalo Brewery founder Herman Grau, Pioneer Box Company president John Stevens, and Sacramento Bee editor Charles K. McClatchy, among others. In 1893, developers attempted to rebrand the neighborhood as "Sutter Terrace." An article in the Sacramento Daily Union reveals the attitude of some local residents toward the proposal:

The resident property-owners in the high district bounded generally by Twentieth and Twenty-third, P and W Streets are getting to be aristocratic in their notions, and from their hights [sic] are inclined to look down patronizingly on the balance of the city. They have about come to the conclusion that the names "Poverty Ridge," "Nob Hill," etc. are entirely too common, and that hereafter these names shall be relegated to the "days of '49," and the hights [sic] in question known as "Sutter Terrace."

The new name did not stick, and the neighborhood continued to be known as "Poverty Ridge." Poverty Ridge's principal blocks between 21st, T, 23rd, and V streets featured generously sized lots on which large, single-family houses could be built. Many of the houses on these blocks were designed by highly-regarded local architects and reflect the most fashionable architectural styles of the time. Charles McClatchy's Beaux Arts style house at 2112 22nd Street was built in 1910 and designed by distinguished local architect Rudolph Herold. In 1940, the McClatchy family donated the house to the City of Sacramento, and it remains in use as a public library today. Next door at 2100 22nd Street, Herold designed his own house in the Prairie style. More modest houses and apartment buildings for middle-class residents were built on smaller lots around the periphery of Poverty Ridge.

Like many of Sacramento's turn-of-the-century residential neighborhoods, proximity to streetcar lines was one of the qualities that attracted residents to Poverty Ridge. Streetcars ran through the neighborhood down 21st and T streets, allowing residents to easily travel to their places of work downtown. After World War II and as automobiles gained in popularity, however, residents of neighborhoods within Sacramento's central grid, such as Poverty Ridge, began to relocate to newer, more modern suburbs outside of the city. The demand for streetcar service declined and finally ended in January 1947.

Nevertheless, Poverty Ridge retained a prestigious reputation, thanks in part to the people who lived there. Internationally celebrated author Joan Didion lived in two houses in the neighborhood, including the Roan-Didion House at 2000 22nd Street, during her adolescence in the 1940s and 1950s. In the 1960s, several houses in Poverty Ridge were demolished as part of the construction of U.S. Highway 50, which borders the district to the south. More recently, infill projects that were halted during the economic recession of the early 2000s have been completed. The largest recent urban infill project is Tapestri Square, a housing development of single-family townhouses that borders the district on the east side of 21st Street.

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the Poverty Ridge Historic District begins in 1868, when city projects addressed flooding around Burns Slough and allowed for residential development to begin in the area, and concludes with the end of streetcar service in 1947 as part of the postwar migration of city residents to new automobile-oriented residential suburbs outside Sacramento's historic urban core.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Shingle, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Tudor, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Revival, Monterey, Prairie, Craftsman, Classic Box, Art Deco, Minimal Traditional, Vernacular

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Historically single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units or commercial businesses • One civic building, constructed for the Sacramento Fire Department • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• Generous parcel sizes on 21st and 22nd streets with plentiful space between houses • Small, one-story single-family houses generally located on the blocks along the district's south border and increasing in height and overall scale to larger, two- to three-story houses as the blocks proceed to the north • Largest, most elaborate houses are frequently situated at street corners and on the elevated areas of the ridge • Some houses with Delta-style high basement and raised first story
Cladding	• Predominately wood siding (typically three- or four-lap siding or shingles, most commonly on upper stories), brick, and stucco, or a combination of these materials • Brick or clinker brick often on first stories
Roofs	• Low hipped roofs with wide overhanging eaves, front- or side-facing gabled roofs, often with a centrally placed dormer • Brick or clinker brick chimneys
Entries & Doors	• Delta-style configuration with staircases leading to primary entrances above a high basement • Central or offset front doors framed with side or transom windows • Wood or terrazzo stairs
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows
Porches	• Prominent full-width or wraparound porches accessed by a staircase • Brick or clinker brick porch bases

Element	Character of Historic District
Ornamentation	• Italianate and Queen Anne details, including incised brackets under roof eaves; decorative, carved woodwork around windows and doors; slender, turned porch posts and balusters; turrets; patterned shingles on gabled ends; rounded windows; and stained-glass windows, especially on transoms over primary entrance • Classical Revival details, including Tuscan columns and dentils along cornice • Craftsman details, including exposed rafter and purlin tails, wooden braces, and tapered square columns
Property Landscape	• Space between and in front of houses often filled with large, grassy lawns or gardens • Sloping lawns with shallow steps and landings in front of houses located on the ridge

Streetscape	• Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees—most often sycamore or palm trees—planted in a parking strip • Concrete upping stones engraved with family names • Iron hitching posts and evidence of removed hitching posts in the form of L-shaped concrete strips next to the street curb • Generous setback of approximately 30 to 40 feet from the street to the primary, street-facing house facades • Wide parking strips (approximately 15 feet wide) along east-west streets; narrower parking strips (approximately 7 feet wide) along north-south streets • Varying sidewalk widths • Many houses constructed toward the end of the period of significance • Wide north-south streets (21nd and 22st streets), with enough space for two cars to easily pass and sometimes with small medians or dividers in the center • East-west streets (U and V streets) are generally narrower, particularly toward the southern end of the district

R STREET HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the R Street Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The R Street Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 17.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 17.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development as a collection of industrial buildings that are associated with R Street's development into a busy industrial, shipping, and transportation corridor from the nineteenth to twentieth century. Buildings constructed in the district reflect their primary usage as warehousing, manufacturing, or distribution facilities that were built along a rail, rather than pedestrian corridor. The primary building facades are located on the numbered streets, rather than facing R Street, where the railroad tracks were located. The buildings also exhibit utilitarian designs—including rectangular floor plans, brick or concrete construction, and commercial features—that reflect the unique needs of the companies for which they were built. Most indicative of their orientation, first toward the railroad activity on R Street and the Q/R Alley, and later around truck-based transportation, the buildings in the district include freight and/or garage openings that reveal the continued importance of the corridor for freight transportation for more than one hundred years. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 17.C and 19, the R Street Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association with a collection of industrial buildings that are associated with R Street's development into a busy industrial, shipping, and transportation corridor from the nineteenth to twentieth century. Buildings constructed in the district reflect their primary usage as warehousing, manufacturing, or distribution facilities that were built along a rail, rather than pedestrian corridor. Even those that diverge from this style exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may begreater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 17.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 17.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the R Street Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 17.B are located within the R Street Historic District as shown in Exhibit 17.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 17.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Vernacular and Commercial Styles: (One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block, and Two-Part Vertical Block), all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 17.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1903 and ends in 1963 and relate to Sacramento's emergence as the center for the railroad industry on the West Coast, as well as the railroad's role in spurring industrial and transportation-related development in Sacramento.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 17.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 17.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 17.C).

Historic Context: The R Street Historic District is a former industrial corridor whose development is closely tied to the evolution of railroads in the city of Sacramento. In 1855, the City of Sacramento granted a right-of-way on R Street to the Sacramento Valley Railroad, the first common carrier and first steam carrier railroad west of the Mississippi. Railroad companies were required to construct and maintain levees along their rights-of-way to assist the young city's efforts to protect itself from periodic flooding. In accordance, the Sacramento Valley Railroad constructed a levee along R Street prior to laying its tracks along the corridor. However, the levee did not have the intended effect and, in fact, exacerbated the effects of flooding in Sacramento. During particularly devastating floods in the winter of 1861-1862, the levee trapped floodwaters within the downtown area for months, and parts of it had to be removed to allow the waters to drain from the city.

When it opened in 1856, the Sacramento Valley Railroad's route was the first rail line in California. The 22-mile route stretched from the Sacramento Valley Railroad depot on the waterfront at Front Street, south along the Sacramento River, and then east along R Street to Folsom (then known as Granite City). The route was surveyed by Theodore Judah, who later helped complete the first transcontinental railroad as chief engineer of the Central Pacific Railroad. The Central Pacific Railroad purchased the Sacramento Valley Railroad in 1865, and later sold it to the Southern Pacific Railroad in 1884. The Sacramento Valley Railroad continued to operate a rail line on R Street.

By the turn of the century, the City had completed the construction of a new system of levees and flood improvement, and the levee on R Street was no longer necessary. In 1903, the levee was removed and the Southern Pacific Railroad's tracks were rebuilt at grade. Three years later, in 1907, a competing railroad company, the Western Pacific Railroad, opened a separate, parallel line on the Q/R Alley (Quill Alley), half a block north of the Southern Pacific's tracks. The concentration of rail lines on and around R Street transformed it into a center of industrial activity so that by 1914, it was recognized as the industrial hub of Sacramento. Warehouses, commercial distribution centers, and light industrial businesses, ranging from one to six stories in height, sprang up along the R Street corridor to take advantage of the unparalleled availability of shipping and transportation opportunities there. These buildings were typically clad in brick or concrete blocks and featured open, rectilinear plans that reflected their utilitarian use. Many were served by spurs of the neighboring railroad tracks: buildings on the south of R Street used the tracks of the Southern Pacific, while those on the north used the tracks of the Western Pacific. Industrial development continued along R Street through the end of the nineteenth century and into the early twentieth century in response to the growth of domestic shipping, increase in local manufacturing and commercial development, and demands of World War I.

R Street remained Sacramento's center for freight shipping through World War II. After the war, commercial transportation began to shift away from the railroads toward truck-based shipping as an increasing number of state highways were completed. In Sacramento, the businesses along R Street reoriented themselves to accommodate this new type of transportation. While earlier buildings were oriented toward the railroad tracks and had loading docks on R Street, buildings constructed in the mid- to late twentieth century featured loading docks that fronted the surface streets to give trucks easier access. This reorientation allowed R Street to remain an active shipping and distribution center until the 1960s.

In 1963, a deep-water port opened at the Port of Sacramento in West Sacramento. Its completion redirected shipping activity from its historic centers at Front and R streets to West Sacramento. By the end of the decade, many of the businesses that had operated on R Street for decades had closed, including Carlaw Granite and Marble Works, which had been in business on the corridor since 1879. Rail passenger service had also declined since the end of the war, and in 1971, the Western Pacific and Southern Pacific railroad companies discontinued their passenger service and transferred it to Amtrak.

Freight traffic continued on R Street for a few more years, but the end was near. In 1974, the Southern Pacific railroad began to retire its tracks on the R Street corridor from 5th to 21st streets. The Western Pacific's freight line, running north-south between 19th and 20th streets was acquired by the Union Pacific railroad in 1982. Although freight activity had ended, tracks were again in service along the corridor in 1987 when the former Western Pacific tracks on the Q/R Alley were converted into a section of the Sacramento Regional Transit's light rail line.

R Street has experienced a significant revitalization in the twenty-first century, transforming into one of Sacramento's most vibrant commercial and recreational corridors. Many of the former industrial buildings in the area have been rehabilitated and are occupied by restaurants and local businesses. In 2015, the Lawrence Warehouse building reopened as the Warehouse Artist Lofts, a mixed-use apartment complex with 116 affordable housing units marketed to members of Sacramento's artist community.

Period of Significance: 1903-1963

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the R Street Historic District begins with the removal of the R Street levee and reconstruction of the Southern Pacific Railroad's tracks at grade in 1903 and ends with the opening of the Port of Sacramento in 1963, which diverted shipping activity away from R Street.

Architectural Styles:
Vernacular, Commercial Styles: (One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Vertical Block)

Character-defining Features:

Element	Character of Historic District
Use	• Warehouses and manufacturing, shipping, and/or processing facilities, most converted into commercial businesses

Mass & Form	• One- to six-story buildings • Rectangular plan • Oriented to central track of sidings

SOUTH SIDE HISTORIC DISTRICT

SECTION 1. Historic District.

The city council hereby amends the South Side Historic District on the Sacramento Register based on the following findings:

A. The South Side Historic District is a geographically defined area, as shown in Exhibit 1.A (District boundaries). (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.a.)

B. The designation of the area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code, related to historic preservation, and is not inconsistent with other goals and policies of the city. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.1.c.)

As explained in Exhibit 18.C (Historic context, period of significance, character-defining features), the district is significant for its association with early twentieth-century community-led movements to increase neighborhood density. Unlike Sacramento's one-block parks that were incorporated as part of the city's original grid plan, Southside Park was a community-driven improvement project, led by the Southside Improvement Association, that was intended to enhance the natural appeal of the neighborhood and draw homeowners from the densely-populated city center. The ensuing development of South Side attracted residents from diverse backgrounds, many of whom were recent immigrants to Sacramento.

Buildings within the district are unified aesthetically by their physical development during the first decades of the twentieth century, the district represents a stylistically unified collection of residential and commercial buildings. Buildings within the district boundaries share complimentary architectural styles, scale, and materials. To the west of Southside Park, the district is characterized by a cohesive grouping of simple, high-basement cottages. To the east of the park, the district is comprised of similar high-basement cottages punctuated by larger homes with more elaborate ornamentation. The designation of this area as a historic district is reasonable, appropriate, and necessary to protect, promote, and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code—the preservation of this important grouping of historically significant properties.

C. The district has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association. (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.a.)

As shown in Exhibits 18.C and 19, the South Side Historic District has integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship, and association as a cohesive grouping of simple, high-basement cottages on the west side of the park, and to the east of the park, the district is comprised of similar high-basement cottages punctuated by larger homes with more elaborate ornamentation and even those that diverge from this style or have been altered exhibit a similar scale, era, use of materials, texture, height, and setback, which contributes to their cohesiveness as a grouping.

D. The city council has considered the city code's directive that the "collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." (City Code § 17.604.210.B.2.b.)

   As shown in Exhibit 19, while the buildings within the district have endured minor changes in materials over the years, the buildings continue to retain a high degree of historic integrity. Despite the minor alterations, these buildings, when taken together, enhance the historic character of the neighborhood.

SECTION 2. Contributing resources.

The contributing resources identified in Exhibit 18.B (with characteristics and photographs shown in Exhibits 1.C and 19) are hereby added to the Sacramento Register as contributing resources to the South Side Historic District, based on the following findings:

A. The contributing resources are within the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

   All resources listed as contributing resources in Exhibit 18.B are located within the South Side Historic District as shown in Exhibit 18.A.

B. The contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations, historical architectural qualities or archaeological values identified for the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.2.)

   As shown in Exhibits 18.C and 19, the contributing resources embody the significant features and characteristics of the historic district and add to the historical associations and historical architectural qualities of the district. The contributing resources retain the significant features and characteristics of the historic district, which are common architectural styles from the late 19th and early 20th century period, such as Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Art Deco, Streamline Moderne, Late Moderne, Mid-Century Modern, Googie/Exaggerated Modern, Vernacular, and Commercial Styles: (One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block) all of which add to the historic architectural qualities and cohesiveness of the district. All of the contributing resources exhibit elements of the architectural styles listed in Exhibit 18.C.

C. The contributing resources were present during the period of historical significance of the historic district and relate to the documented historical significance of the historic district. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibit 19, all the contributing resources were present during the district's period of significance, which begins in 1871 and ends in 1965 and relate to significant physical and demographic changes that took place in Sacramento during the mid-twentieth century.

D. The contributing resources possess historic integrity. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.1.)

As shown in Exhibits 18.C and 19, the contributing resources have sufficient historic integrity for listing on the Sacramento Register. Historic integrity is the ability of a property to convey its significance. The listed properties' physical features relate to the district's significance and retain several and, in most cases, most of the seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.

E. The contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code. (City Code § 17.604.210.C.5.)

As shown in Exhibits 18.C and 19, the contributing resources have important historic or architectural worth, and their designation as contributing resources is reasonable, appropriate and necessary to protect, promote and further the goals and purposes of chapter 17.604 of the Sacramento city code as all of the resources exhibit the significant features and characteristics of the district and are consistent with the important historical themes identified in the historic context for the district (Exhibit 81.C).

Exhibit 1.C - Historic Context, Period of Significance, and Character-defining Features

Historic Context: The South Side Historic District preserves a vibrant, mixed-use neighborhood in the southwestern quadrant of Sacramento's original 1848 street grid. At the time of the city's initial settlement in the mid-nineteenth century, this area was characterized by agricultural fields and low-lying marsh land. Two major infrastructure developments helped to shape the evolution of the South Side during this early period, the first of which was the construction of the R Street levee on the city's southern edge in 1854. Although it was intended to protect the young city from periodic flooding, it had the opposite effect. During particularly devastating flooding in the winter of 1861-1862, the R Street levee trapped floodwaters within the city for several months. Because of the presence of the levee and the constant threat of flooding, the area to the south of R Street remained sparsely populated until the end of the nineteenth century.

The second major development was the establishment of the Sacramento Valley Railroad, which constructed its route along the top of the R Street levee and began its operations in 1856. The S.V.R.R. was California's first railroad line and spanned 22 miles between Sacramento and Folsom. Following the construction of an improved levee system on Y Street in 1878, the R Street levee was removed and the railroad tracks, by then owned by the Southern Pacific Company, were rebuilt at ground-level in 1903.

A majority of industrial development in the South Side area occurred along the waterfront to take advantage of access to riverboats traveling up and down the river daily and employed large numbers of people. The remainder of land beyond the levee was occupied by moderately sized homes, small garden plots, and uncultivated marsh land, including a slough between 6th and 8th streets that would later become the site of Southside Park. In 1871, the Sacramento City Street Railway extended its line south along 10th Street to the City Cemetery on Y Street. By 1900, another streetcar line would be added that ran east along T Street from 3rd Street to 28th Street. A map published by the Sanborn Map Company in 1895 illustrates the resulting increase in development, especially to the east of 8th Street.

The gradual influx of residents to South Side led to the establishment of the Southside Improvement Association around 1900. The focus of the organization was to lobby for the removal of the R Street levee and the beautification of the slough land between R and Y streets. After the levee's removal in 1903, the Southside Improvement Association, led by many of the South Side's landowners, shifted its efforts to the creation of a multi-block park that it hoped would attract more residents to the area. The project was an early example of a community-led improvement project that aimed to increase neighborhood density.

By 1907, the City's Board of Trustees had approved plans for the creation of Southside Park, which were to be carried out by architect Rudolf Herold, engineer George Randal, and landscape architect John McLaren, designer of San Francisco's Golden Gate Park. The design of Southside Park was influenced by the nineteenth-century principles of urban planning and park development exhibited by the works of Frederick Law Olmsted and his contemporaries. The completed park covered eight city blocks, totaling 26 acres in size.

A massive building boom in South Side marked the years that followed. Numerous newspaper articles and advertisements touted the area's charm and the recreational amenities. A listing in the Sacramento Union from 1909, in the midst of the park's construction, described Southside Park as "Sacramento's show garden" and declared that adjacent property values would "soar sky high" because of their proximity to the new park. While larger homes were built on the land closest to the park, the majority of the newly subdivided parcels were developed for modestly scaled homes in architectural styles characteristic of the period, such as the Craftsman and Classical Revival styles.

South Side was an attractive location for local residents who were vacating Sacramento's overcrowded city center. Additionally, because South Side was one of the few neighborhoods where racial covenants did not restrict homeownership, it was settled by the many immigrant and ethnic groups that arrived in Sacramento during the first half of the twentieth century. By the 1920s, South Side could already be characterized as a multicultural neighborhood. The area's unique cultural milieu brought about the construction of many churches and societal halls that contributed to the neighborhood's architectural character.

While many of South Side's earliest inhabitants were Irish immigrants, it was primarily a neighborhood of Portuguese and Italian immigrants prior to the 1950s. The local Portuguese community was centered around 3rd and T streets. Its cultural and spiritual heart were the ODES Hall (Ordem do Divino Espirito Santo, or Order of the Divine Holy Spirit) at 514 W Street and St. Elizabeth's Church at the corner of 12th and S Street. Italians settled along S and T streets as far east as 19th Street and attended St. Mary's Church, which was originally located at 8th and N and relocated to the corner of 7th and T streets in 1915.

A new influx of ethnic groups flowed into the South Side neighborhood in the 1950s as a result of the redevelopment of Sacramento's West End, located immediately to the north. Many displaced Japanese, Chinese, Latino, and African American residents relocated to South Side during this period. A Mexican community grew along 4th and 5th streets, southward toward Y Street (now Broadway). The community centered around El Centro Mexicano, dedicated in 1948 and located next to Southside Park at 6th and W streets, and Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, built in 1958 at 711 T Street.

Highway construction in the middle decades of the twentieth century forever altered the South Side neighborhood. Demolition for U.S. Route 50, planned to run east to west between W and X streets, began in 1965 and resulted in the destruction of a quarter of Southside Park, hundreds of houses, and significant community buildings, including the ODES Hall. The completed highway also effectively cut South Side off from the newer, wealthier neighborhoods of Curtis Park and Land Park that had developed to the south of Y Street (now Broadway) in the early twentieth century. Meanwhile, the construction of Interstate 5, running north to south between Front and 3rd streets, in the 1960s severed the neighborhood's connection to the river waterfront. The highway project devastated the industrial corridor along the Sacramento River and the Portuguese business district located along 3rdStreet. South Side fell into disrepair, and residents with the means to relocate moved to newer residential suburbs outside of Sacramento.

In the twenty-first century, South Side has retained its identity as an inclusive, multicultural neighborhood. Students and young professionals have moved into the neighborhood, attracted by its combination of inexpensive housing, proximity to Southside Park, shady street trees, and historic architecture, and turned many of its single-family homes into shared living spaces. Infill projects, such as the 1990s cohousing project at 5th and T streets, have filled in many vacant lots leftover from redevelopment projects, while historic preservation efforts, led by local homeowners and the City of Sacramento, have resulted in the restoration of historic houses in the neighborhood.

Period of Significance: 1871-1965

Period of Significance Justification: The period of significance for the South Side Historic District begins with the inauguration of streetcar service down 10th Street to Y Street in 1871 and ends when demolition for the construction of Highway 50 began in 1965. The district has an expansive period of significance to incorporate the area's initial period of physical development as well as the significant physical and demographic changes that took place in the mid-twentieth century, which contribute to the unique architectural character and cultural significance of the district.

Architectural Styles: Italianate, Queen Anne, Stick/Eastlake, Folk Victorian, Colonial Revival, Classical Revival, Classic Box, Tudor, Beaux Arts, French Eclectic, Italian Renaissance, Mission, Spanish Eclectic, Mediterranean Revival, Prairie, Craftsman, Minimal Traditional, Art Deco, Streamline Moderne, Late Moderne, Mid-Century Modern, Googie/Exaggerated Modern, Vernacular, Commercial Styles: (One-Part Commercial Block, Two-Part Commercial Block)

Character-defining Features:

Use	• Historically single-family residences, some converted into multi-family units • Small commercial businesses, typically located on street corners • Parking and auxiliary uses located along alleys
Mass & Form	• Civic and institutional buildings—such as churches, schools, and community organizations—concentrated around community "gathering place" of Southside Park • Buildings generally one-to-three stories tall • Some houses with Delta-style high basements and raised first story • Predominately cuboid or horizontal massing; although older houses often exhibit vertical massing • Larger houses generally located on lettered streets, with smaller houses more typically located on numbered streets, especially toward the district's southern boundary near U.S. Route 50 • Many houses in the Classic Box form located along the route of a former street car line on T Street

Cladding	• Predominately wood siding, typically three-lap, channel rustic, or shingle siding of varying shapes, especially on upper stories and gabled ends • Occasional use of brick, stucco, or a combination of the two • Stucco cladding as a common alteration, often combined with clay or cement tile roofs
Roofs	• Front-facing gabled, hipped, or jerkinhead roofs, often with centrally-placed hipped or shed dormers • Brick and clinker brick chimneys
Windows	• Wood-frame double-hung windows • Front- and side-facing bay windows
Porches	• Prominent full, half, or central porches with Classical, square tapered, paired, or turned columns accessed by stairs
Ornamentation	• Queen Anne, Eastlake, and Classical Revival details, including incised brackets; spindlework; turned or Tuscan columns, patterned shingles, and rounded bay windows • Craftsman details, including exposed rafter and purlin tails, wood braces, tapered square columns, and low shed dormers
Property Landscape	• Small lawns or gardens in front of many houses
Streetscape	• Generally uniform setback from street to property line of approximately 16 feet from sidewalks to primary building facades with an eight-foot-wide sidewalk and eight-foot- wide grass parking strip on lettered streets, and a slightly narrower measurements on numbered streets • Rows of mature, deciduous street trees—most commonly sycamore, elm, walnut, and cork trees and some rows of evenly spaced palms—planted in a parking strip along the street curb • Evidence of hitching posts in the form of L-shaped concrete strips next to street curbs in front of some turn-of-the-century houses • Narrow driveways leading to garages that are built into the first story of a house, attached to the side of a house, or constructed as free-standing structures on the alley.

Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza]

Historic District Plan

Physical Description & Boundaries

The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District (formerly [Cesar Chavez Memorial] Plaza Park/CBD Historic District) is situated in the northwest quadrant of Sacramento's 1848 street grid and features one the city's original one-block public squares. The district's name references several names held by the plaza over the course of its history, while "CBD" is an abbreviation for "Central Business District," a title sometimes given to Sacramento's downtown core.

In addition to the plaza, the district consists of a mix of late nineteenth- to mid-twentieth-century commercial and civic buildings, some of monumental scale. The district is roughly bounded by H Street to the north, 8th Street to the west, L Street to the south, and 11th Street to the east.

Brief Historic Context

The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District has witnessed nearly 170 years of Sacramento's history and features an equally broad spectrum of architectural periods and styles. Sacramentans have referred to the plaza by a number of names over the course of its history, including its such early appellations as City Plaza, Plaza Park, or simply, "the Plaza," and its current name, Cesar Chavez Park. The one-block lot, was one of ten public squares donated to the City by John A. Sutter, Jr. in 1848 as part of the laying out of his father's rancho into Sacramento's original street grid.[1] After Sacramento attained its status as the state capital in 1854, it was proposed that the plaza be used for the site of the Capitol building, a scheme that was later abandoned.[2]

The square remained undeveloped open space for several decades, to the point that local newspapers described it as an "omnium gatherum of wagons and weeds."[3] In 1872, Street Commissioner John Rider was "determined to fill-in the plaza and reclaim it from the circus, the strayed animal, the dump cart and the winter's waters."[4] The square was filled an average of five feet with material taken from the bed of the American River.[5] John Keating was hired to design the landscape of the park. Keating's axial plan is still visible in the plaza's present layout.

The improvement of the plaza was a major endeavor that coincided with the raising of street levels in downtown Sacramento. The devastating floods of 1861 and 1862 prompted the local government to improve the public infrastructure of the city. Not only was the street raising project undertaken in the interest of safeguarding Sacramento residents, but also as a measure to ensure that Sacramento remained a viable location for the State Capitol and an attractive destination for the terminus of the transcontinental railroad.6

From 1868 through 1869, street levels were raised as much as 14 feet on K Street between 4th and 10th streets, I Street between 5th and 10th streets; 8th Street between I and K streets; and 9th and 10th streets between I and J streets.[7] As a whole, the streets were raised to be level with the plaza, which was the highest land mass in the city.[8] The resulting streetscape included hollow sidewalks, many of which are still intact within the area.

The plaza is surrounded on all sides by multi-story institutional and commercial buildings. While the majority of the area's core buildings date from the late-1890s through the 1930s, some date to the earlier commercial development of downtown Sacramento.[9] The two-story brick building located at 904 J Street was constructed in 1856, making it the oldest extant structure in the district and one of the oldest in the city. During the mid-nineteenth century, J Street was the primary route for travelers passing through on their way to the gold fields in the foothills of the Sierras. Here, wagon trains were able to restock their provisions before exiting the city at 12th Street.[10] The building at 904 J Street was occupied by a drug store under various names and proprietors from as early as its construction until the mid-twentieth century.[11]

Throughout the remainder of the nineteenth century, the parcels adjacent to the plaza were characterized by a multitude of uses, such as that of the "Old Reliable" drug store at 904 J Street.[12] A map of Sacramento published by the Sanborn Map Company in 1895 depicts a mix of single-family dwellings, stables, manufacturers, shops, junk yards, and hotels situated on the major commercial thoroughfares of I, J, K, and L streets.[13] Some of the notable buildings that were constructed during this period include the Hale Brothers Department Store at 825 K Street, the I.O.O.F. Temple at 1025 9th Street, and the Ruhstaller Building at 900 J Street. The Ruhstaller Building was constructed in 1898 for Frank J. Ruhstaller and housed a taproom for the Buffalo Brewing Company, Elks Hall, doctors' offices, and commercial businesses.[14]

The first decades of the twentieth century ushered in a building boom unlike anything Sacramento had witnessed since the Gold Rush.[15] The California-Western States Life Insurance Building, constructed in 1925 at the corner of the corner of J and 10th streets, remains a testament to this era of growth and prosperity. The classical motifs of the skyscraper compliment the Beaux Arts and Renaissance Revival municipal buildings that were also built during this period. Because of its proximity to the State Capitol grounds, the area was increasingly civic-oriented after the turn of the twentieth century. The ornate City Hall and Sacramento City Library, both located at the northern terminus of the district, were constructed in 1911 and 1918, respectively.

The area felt the effects of the Great Depression but did not cease to be a center of activity in the city. The Federal Courthouse and Post Office Building, constructed in 1933, was one of many federally-funded projects that employed Sacramentans during the Depression.[16] Likewise, the Hart Brothers Cafeteria, located at 1016-1020 10th Street, served thousands of meals per day to the area's large unemployed and transient populations. At the height of the Depression, the restaurant offered free coffee and bread every evening.[17]

During World War II, defense-related industries brought thousands of new residents to Sacramento. The staggering population growth felt by the greater metro-area brought with it renewed commercial spending to downtown.[18] The Baby Boom Generation flocked to department stores on J and K streets. Among the enterprises within the area were the Hale Brothers Department Store and S.H. Kress and Company. These businesses stood as pillars of the postwar city by catering to the "pent-up consumer demand" of the region's rapidly expanding middle class.[19]

The district changed dramatically with the rise of Sacramento's suburbs. In 1954, the shops and major department stores on K Street accounted for 75.6 percent of the county's sales tax base. That figure had dropped to 19.6 percent by 1965.[20] The long-standing establishments of the district opened suburban branches throughout the 1950s and 1960s, many of which were more profitable than their downtown locations.[21] The first regional mall in the vicinity of Sacramento, the Country Club Center, was opened in 1951.[22] The Country Club Center and other new malls offered a more convenient shopping experience for the rapidly expanding suburban population.

The decline in urban commercial activity during the mid-twentieth century was directly linked to the increased efficiency of automobile transportation. The transformation was slow, at first. In 1947, the city's extensive streetcar network was shut down in favor of buses and personal vehicles, a change that impacted the pedestrian character of downtown. In 1955, K and L streets were converted into one-way thoroughfares connecting the Tower Bridge to U.S. Route 40.[23] The final setback to the once thriving central business district came in 1968 with the completion of the Interstates 5 and 80 through downtown Sacramento, diverting automobile traffic away from city streets, entirely, and on to outlying shopping malls and newer residential areas.[24]

The plaza played an important role in the revitalization

of the central business district towards the end of the twentieth century. In 1989, the Plaza Park Steering Committee worked with People for Public Places. Inc. to conduct an evaluation of the park. Their study led to the development of a popular restaurant in the park.[25] In 1995, the Downtown Sacramento Partnership established the state's first property-based improvement district, which has brought countless community events and programs to the plaza over the years.[26] In 1999, the plaza was renamed Cesar Chavez Plaza after the labor rights activist and founder of the United Farm Workers of America.[27]

Significance

The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District was designated for listing on the Sacramento Register of Historic and Cultural Resources by the City Preservation Commission in 1985 in Ordinance #85-076 as the [Cesar Chavez Memorial] Plaza Park/CBD Historic District.

The following table provides a current evaluation of significance under the requirements and considers the factors based on the above historic district context and the 2018 historic district survey. Additionally, this historic district relates to the Railroad Context Statement and World War II, Transportation, and Redevelopment Context Statement of the city's General Plan Technical Background Report.

(B) Listing on the Sacramento Register – Historic districts
(1) Requirements
(a)	The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District meets requirement (a) for listing on the Sacramento Register, because it is a geographically definable area.
(b)(i)	The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District meets requirement (b)(i) for listing on the Sacramento Register as an area that possesses "a significant concentration or continuity of buildings unified by: (A) past events or (B) aesthetically by plan or physical development." The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District is significant for its concentration of buildings that reflect over a century of civic and commercial development in Sacramento's central business district. The diversity of buildings and uses within the district also reflect changing tastes in commercial and civic architectural styles over time. Early twentieth-century civic and institutional buildings, including City Hall and the Sacramento City Library, are characteristic examples of the Beaux Arts and Italian Renaissance styles, respectively. Conversely, the design of the Federal Courthouse and Post Office, which was constructed at the low point of the Great Depression, is representative of federally funded WPA buildings of the period. The district's many commercial buildings, meanwhile, range from small nineteenth-century brick commercial buildings to the larger department stores of major national brands that remained a vibrant part of the city through the middle of the twentieth century.
(b)(ii)	The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District meets requirement (b)(ii) for listing on the Sacramento Register as an area "associated with an event, person, or period significant or important to city history." The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District is significant for its association with Sacramento's evolution from burgeoning Gold Rush town to modern metropolitan city. Cesar Chavez Plaza, formerly the City Plaza, was, itself, one of the public squares donated by John A. Sutter, Jr. to the City as part of the laying out of his father's rancho into the city's existing street grid. It was also the first of these squares to be developed as a park. Its present form still exhibits some of the elements of John Keating's original landscape design from 1872, such as its axial walkway plan. Additionally, the district contains several high-integrity sections of hollow sidewalks that were created when the city's streets were raised during the 1860s to protect the city from floods. The effort stabilized Sacramento and allowed the city to continue to expand. Moderately-sized brick buildings on the edges of the plaza recall early commercial development in Sacramento's central business district in the nineteenth century, while the concentration of grand civic buildings—including Sacramento's City Hall, City Library, and Federal Courthouse and Post Office—and larger early to mid-twentieth-century commercial buildings on K Street reflect Sacramento's growth into a modern city.

Period of Significance: 1848-1951

The period of significance for the Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District spans from 1848, when Sacramento's original street grid and public plazas were laid out, to 1951, when the Country Club Center was erected as Sacramento's first regional mall, drawing commercial activity away from downtown. The suburban mall, along with increased automobile and home ownership during the postwar period, forever changed the ways in which residents interacted with the central business district.[28] Large shopping malls outside of Sacramento's downtown grid attracted mobile, middle-class individuals who were no longer dependent localized services and retail.

(B) Listing on the Sacramento Register – Historic districts
(1) Requirements
(c)	The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District meets requirement (c) for listing on the Sacramento Register as it aligns with the goals and purposes of historic preservation in Sacramento, as well as the city's other goals and policies. Per the Sacramento City Code, the preservation of the district enhances the "city's economic, cultural and aesthetic standing, its identity and its livability, marketability, and urban character."

(B) Listing on the Sacramento Register – Historic districts
(2) Factors to be considered
(a)	Factor (2)(a) states that "a historic district should have integrity of design, setting, materials, workmanship and association." The East End Historic District retains sufficient integrity to meet this factor for consideration as a historic district.
(b)	Factor (2)(b) states that "the collective historic value of the buildings and structures in a historic district taken together may be greater than the historic value of each individual building or structure." The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District meets this factor because its buildings and structures represent a significant and distinguishable entity whose collective historic value is greater when taken as a whole.

Use	• Commercial and civic buildings of varying ages and styles oriented around 9th Street and Cesar Chavez Plaza • Changes in use and character between the north and south ends of the district—large civic buildings concentrated on I and 9th streets at the northern terminus of the district, modest One- and Two-Part Block commercial buildings on the south edge of the plaza, and large department stores located on K Street (i.e. Hale Brothers, Kress, and Montgomery & Ward)
Mass & Form	• Horizontally massed civic buildings and vertically massed commercial buildings • Tallest buildings frequently situated on corner parcels
Materials	• Predominately brick, stone, terracotta, and concrete masonry
Roofs	• Predominately flat roofs with protruding cornices and ornamented soffits • Commercial buildings with flat or geometric parapets, particularly those facing the south edge of the plaza
Entries & Doors	• Recessed entrances, particularly on One-Part Commercial Block buildings • Presence or evidence of garage doors for vehicular access on numbered streets and alleys
Windows	• Large shopfront windows at street level • Multi-story boxed, semi-hexagonal, and rounded bay windows • Wood-frame, double-hung windows on the upper stories of mixed-use buildings

Element	Character of Historic District
Ornamentation	• Minimal wall surface ornamentation • Classical Revival details, such as egg-and-dart trim, dentil bands, medallions, and garlands • High density of Art Deco-style elements near the intersection of 9th and K streets • Columns and pilasters topped with Ionic or Corinthian capitals and Roman or segmental arches with prominent voussoirs and keystones • Ghost signs on the exposed sides of older brick buildings
Property Landscape	• Minimal or no property landscaping due to zero-lot-line buildings • Axial pathways intersecting at the Coleman Fountain at the center of Cesar Chavez Plaza
Streetscape	• Deep, south-facing setbacks in front of City Hall and the Federal Courthouse and Post Office building • Minimal or no setback in front of commercial buildings throughout the district • Rows of mature, evenly spaced, deciduous street trees—most often sycamore, palm, and walnut trees—planted in planters or small parking strips lining the sidewalks • Large gilded lampposts at the primary entrances of civic buildings • Extant hollow sidewalks and sunken alleyways dating to the street raising campaigns of the 1860s • Some cobblestones and granite curbs along street edges

Boundaries & Location

The following map shows the boundaries and location of the Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District.

District-Specific Standards & Criteria

Design Principle

Maintain and strengthen the grand civic and commercial character of this district as part of Sacramento's historic civic core.

Rationale

The Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District contains many of the city's most iconic civic and commercial resources, ranging from Sacramento's first civic institutions and its first developed park in the late nineteenth century to iconic commercial buildings constructed in the early and mid-twentieth century. The area represents the city's symbolic center, consisting of a variety of buildings and public spaces that contained the activities that defined city life. The district continues to serve as the city's civic core and is connected by important commercial and transportation corridors along 9th and 10th streets to the Capitol and J and K streets to Downtown, the intermodal transit facility, outlining freeways, and the city's outlining neighborhoods. The preservation of the contributing resources which convey the district's historic significance and the strengthening of its civic identity is vital for a thriving downtown.

In addition to the Standards & Criteria Common to Sacramento's Historic Districts in Section 1, the following district-specific standards and criteria apply when planning a project in the Plaza Park [Cesar Chavez Plaza] Historic District.

1. Rehabilitation of Contributing Resources

1.1 Make every effort to preserve, repair, and maintain existing steel or wood frame windows, which contribute to the commercial or civic character of the district.

- Re-instate multi-lite steel or wood frame windows, where they have been removed, if there is adequate documentation and if feasible.
- Replace removed historic street-facing windows where feasible, if there is adequate documentation to inform design.

1.2 Avoid filling in or obstructing historic window or door openings.

1.3 Re-open historic window and door openings that have been filled in.

- Use compatible new windows and door materials, types, and forms.

1.4 Preserve and restore articulated storefronts with recessed entries on contributing buildings.

1.5 Avoid painting or applying new finishes on historically unpainted exterior masonry, particularly where historic painted signs (ghost signs) are present.

- Consider removing paint or finishes from historically unpainted exterior masonry, using the gentlest methods possible, during exterior repairs or renovations.
- Maintain paint on exterior masonry where likely to be the historic condition.

Figure 263. Historic exterior cladding and decorative ornamentation contribute to the character of the district as a whole.

Figure 264. The historic facades, exterior materials, windows, and entries of several buildings on J Street have been covered with incompatible non-historic cladding and additions.

2. Additions & Accessory Structures for Contributing Resources

2.1 Where rooftop additions are desired, consider using step backs in order to maintain the existing street façade height, especially facing Cesar Chavez Plaza.

2.2 Maintain existing recessed entries where they exist to preserve the characteristic street frontage pattern.

2.3 Use durable, high-quality materials that are compatible with the materials of adjacent contributing buildings in the district such as stone, cast-stone, masonry, concrete, metal, and wood.

3. New (Infill) Construction & Alterations to Non-Contributing Resources

3.1 Preserve the historic pattern of siting new buildings with a zero-lot-line setback from the street.

3.2 Where buildings taller than the surrounding contributing buildings are proposed, consider using step backs to maintain the existing street facade height of adjacent contributing buildings.

- Taller heights and larger masses may be appropriate for buildings sited at street corners.
- New buildings adjacent to 926 J Street should be lower in height and set back to protect visibility of the contributing high-rise building.

3.3 Consider the alignment of windows, doors, and variations in façade treatments to be compatible with adjacent contributing buildings in order to maintain the existing pattern of door and window openings within the block.

3.4 Use durable, high-quality materials that are compatible with those in the historic district.

3.5 Incorporate awnings that reference the form, scale, and materials of historic awnings at ground level of primary street frontages.

Figure 265. The addition to City Hall incorporates materials, height, scale, and a generous setback that are compatible with the historic building and maintain its primacy in the wider streetscape.

4. Site Features, Streetscape, & Landscaping

4.1 Maintain and preserve existing historic landscape plan and features at Cesar Chavez Plaza, including axial pathways and statues.

4.2 Preserve historic street and alley grades, when feasible.

4.3 Maintain and preserve existing historic cobblestones and street paving.

4.4 Maintain, preserve, and, where necessary, repair and restore historic lighting and signage features.

4.5 Use signage methods, materials, and proportions that are reflective of historic signage used on contributing properties within the district.

4.6 Encourage a streetscape palette including lighting, street furniture, and street tree planting along 9th Street to Capitol Avenue that is compatible with that used at Cesar Chavez Plaza.

4.7 Encourage a streetscape palette at J Street surrounding Cesar Chavez Plaza that is compatible with that along 9th Street.
